In outline the regulations would require each FPC to establish a pharmacy practices sub-Committee (PPSC) to exercise its powers to control entry. Each PPSC would consist of three pharmacists and three non-pharmacists plus a lay chairman. The pharmacist members would be appointed from a list drawn up by each FPC's local pharmaceutical committee and there would be the normal rules governing declaration of interest. There would always be a majority of non-pharmacists taking part in any determination of an application. Minor changes of location such as a move to better premises or a move which reflects changes in patients needs would normally be approved by a quicker procedure. Other more significant changes would be considered in detail by the PPSC.

After any oral hearing or site visit it considered necessary, the PPSC would decide whether the proposed change in NHS patient services was necessary or desirable. In other words whether the NHS pharmaceutical service to the public would be improved to a worthwhile extent if the application were approved. Where there was more than one application for any particular location, applications would be considered in the order in which they were lodged.

We would recommend firmly that PPSC's should not adopt norms or rules constraining local judgments, but PPSCs would have available to them FPC strategies for primary care services plus a very wide range of other information. This would cover both NHS service patterns and such local data as for example, census data and population projections. Community health councils, local medical and pharmaceutical committees and other pharmaceutical contractors in the locality would also be offered a chance to comment, within 30 days of notice of the application being sent out. There would be provision for applicants and anyone who commented to the PPSC to appeal against its decision. Such appeals would be heard by locally convened appeals panels.

Their composition would parallel that of the PPSCs, but the members for any particular appeal would be drawn from lists prepared by FPCs who had not been involved in that application. The appeal panel's decision would be binding on the FPC concerned. There would be no further appeal. The existing rules governing the opening of pharmacies in rural areas would remain in operation. Applicants in rural areas successful under the new scheme would be referred as at present to the Rural Dispensing Committee and would require its consent also. Unless successful applicants provided NHS pharmaceutical services as specified in their application within a defined period, their permission to do so would lapse.

Contractors who, before this new scheme was announced, had entered into binding financial commitments will be protected by short-term transitional arrangements. I intend this new scheme, which offers considerable benefits to patients and the NHS to come into operation at as early a date as possible. The consultation should be completed in two or three weeks. The regulations will then be laid and the guidance document will be placed in the Library.

Academic Medical Staff

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what effect he expects the reduction in the number of academic posts in university medical schools to have upon the availability and willingness of academic medical staff to carry out consultancy sessions in the relevant National Health Service hospitals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am reluctant to speculate but I can report a steady rise in the number and whole-time equivalent of honorary consultants in the National Health Service in England and Wales. These are usually academic medical staff. The figures are given in the table. Academic medical staff have an interest in honorary work for the National Health Service, for example, in maintaining their clinical skills as a practical basis for teaching.

Consultants (Contracts)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the reasons for regional health authorities continuing to keep the contracts for consultants working in a district health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 17 June to my hon. Friend the Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Hickmet) at column 53.

Immigrants (Benefits)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the eligibility of (a) immigrants with various categories of limited leave to stay, in the United Kingdom, (b) immigrants who are settled in the United Kingdom with indefinite leave to stay, (c) immigrants who enter under the special voucher system and (d) sponsored immigrants to the following benefits: supplementary benefit, family income supplement, attendance allowance, mobility allowance, invalidity benefit, severe disablement allowance and housing benefit.

Mr. Newton: The following rules apply: Supplementary benefit is in principle available to anyone who is present in Great Britain and who satisfies the normal conditions governing eligibility, but the restrictions which apply to immigrants are broadly:

(a) people who are given limited leave to enter the country and are here temporarily on the understanding that they will be self-supporting and will have no recourse to public funds cannot normally get benefit. In certain circumstances, urgent needs payments may be made to these people.

(b) in the case of "sponsored" immigrants payment may be subject to recovery from the sponsor.

People from abroad admitted for settlement here, including those admitted under the special voucher system, are entitled to benefit in the normal way.

Family income supplement, attendance allowance, mobility allowance, invalidity benefit, severe disablement allowance (which has replaced non-contributory invalidity pension) and housing benefit are available to immigrants who satisfy the normal rules, including those relating to residence or presence, except that students with limited leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom are not entitled to housing benefit. This exclusion does not apply if the student qualifies for supplementary benefit.

Benefits

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what tests of (a) residence and (b) presence are applied to those claiming each of the following benefits: supplementary benefit, family income supplement, attendance allowance, mobility allowance, invalidity benefit, severe disablement allowance, invalid care allowance and housing benefit; in what ways he envisages the Government's proposals for reform of the social security system altering the current positions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The basic rules relating to residence and presence are as follows:

Supplementary Benefit

There is no residence test for supplementary benefit, but the claimant must be present in Great Britain.

Family Income Supplement

Family Income Supplement is payable to families present in Great Britain, provided that, at the date of claim, the family is ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom and at least one adult member is resident in Great Britain.

Attendance and Invalid Care Allowance

For these benefits, the claimant must be:

(a) ordinarily resident in Great Britain

(b) present in Great Britain on the day for which benefit is claimed and any day thereafter and previously present for a period or periods amounting to 26 weeks in the 12 months preceding that day.

Mobility Allowance

The claimant must be:

(a) ordinarily resident in Great Britain

(b) present in Great Britain on the day for which benefit is claimed and previously present for a period or periods amounting to 52 weeks in the 18 months preceding that day.

Invalidity Benefit

There are no residence or presence tests but the benefit follows on from sickness benefit for which the relevant contribution conditions have to be satisfied. Invalidity benefit is paid to someone abroad only in defined circumstances and remains subject to the submission of medical evidence of incapacity for work.

Severe Disablement Allowance

The claimant must:

(a) have been ordinarily resident in Great Britain for at least 10 years in the 20 years preceding the claim, or if under age 20, at least 10 years since birth.

(b) be present in Great Britain on the day for which benefit is claimed and any day thereafter and previously present for not less than 168 days out of the 196-day qualifying period of incapacity for work.

Housing Benefit

There are no presence rules for housing benefit. Claimants are eligible for benefit if they occupy a dwelling in Great Britain as their home.

We are looking at ways in which differences between such rules can be reduced or eliminated so as to help both staff and claimants. The precise form of the presence test to be used in connection with the proposed income support scheme is also under consideration.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what figures are available to indicate the number of people by convenient district unit in England who are in receipt of (a) housing benefit, (b) housing benefit and supplementary benefit and (c) housing benefit supplement;

(2) what figures are available to indicate the number of people by convenient district unit in Wales who are in receipt of (a) housing benefit, (b) housing benefit and supplementary benefit and (c) housing benefit supplement.

Mr. Whitney: I have placed tables giving the numbers of recipients of rent rebates, rent allowances and rate rebates, in England and in Wales, in the Library. Housing benefit recipients who also receive supplementary benefit are identified as "certificated cases" in these tables. Information relating to housing benefit supplement is only available for 1983-84 and I have placed a copy of tables containing this information for England and for Wales in the Library. I have also sent a copy of these tables and the tables referred to above for 1985-86 direct to the hon. Member. All the information in the tables has been obtained from local authority subsidy claims.

Mentally Handicapped Children

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what further plans he has for ensuring that children in long-stay mental handicap hospitals are moved out of hospitals.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Leaflets (Gaelic)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the result of his Department's experimentation in producing leaflets, SB1 and "Which Benefit" in the Gaelic language; and if he plans to issue any further leaflets in Gaelic.

Mr. Whitney: Leaflet SB1 was translated into Gaelic and published in April 1984 and evaluated in June of that year. It was found that there had been very little public interest in it (much of that was to assist in the teaching of school children). It was felt doubtful that more publicity would have increased take-up. Another evaluation will take place shortly in order to determine whether the publication should continue. Leaflet FB2 "Which Benefit" has not been translated into Gaelic.

Health Authorities (Chairmen)

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy in relation to the appointment of district health authority chairmen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We regard the chairmanship of a district health authority as an important post. As such it demands people of the highest calibre. Although there is no statutory duty to do so, we seek nominations for these posts from a number of sources, including from hon. Members. In that respect, I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 18 April to my hon. Friend the Member for Stevenage, (Mr. Wood) at column 277.

Board and Lodging

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people in Burnley were receiving board and lodging allowances at the latest date for which figures are available;

(2) how many people under 25 years were receiving board and lodging allowances at the latest date for which figures are available in Burnley.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that the analyses of board and lodging in all local offices including Burnley, following the 29 April changes, have not yet been completed. Prior to this date, information on the number of supplementary benefit claimants receiving board and lodging allowances was not available separately.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services within what timescale he expects appeals against rejection of applications for exemption under the new board and lodgings regulations to be heard normally; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: When an appeal is lodged at a local office, the decision appealed against is immediately examined to ensure that the decision is correct. For supplementary benefit decisions, over half of all appeals are either withdrawn or superseded following this re-examination. In the first quarter of 1984, the latest period for which information is available, the average length of time from lodgement of a supplementary benefit appeal to initial hearing by a social security appeal tribunal was ten and a half weeks. Separate information about appeals on exemption under the 1985 board and lodging regulations is not available.

NHS (In Vitro Fertilisation)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to increase the provision of resources for in vitro fertilisation facilities within the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is for individual health authorities to determine the level of provision of infertility services, including in vitro fertilisation treatment.

Housing Benefits

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims have been submitted by retirement pensioners to his Department for housing benefits in each year since 1979.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

World Mental Health Congress

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which officials from his Department were present at the recent World Mental Health Congress in Brighton in which the effects of powerful tranquillisers were discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Nine administrative and professional staff from our Department attended some part of the congress at which a wide range of issues were discussed.

Largactil

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the safety of the drug Largactil is currently under review by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Largactil has been reviewed by the Committee on the Review of Medicines under the Medicines Act along with other major tranquillisers. On the basis of the committee's advice, we consider the safety of this product acceptable in view of its substantial benefits.

Drug Safety (Guidance)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines his Department issues to doctors and patients about the use of drugs whose safety is under review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The safety of all medicines is continuously under review by the Committee on the Safety of Medicines. Advice on the safety of particular medicines is issued to all prescribers in product data sheets issued by manufacturers of prescription only medicines and in the British National Formulary, which is issued twice yearly. Where a serious safety problem arises it is mentioned in the Committee on Safety of Medicines' fact sheet "Current Problems" which is issued, normally four times a year, to all doctors and pharmacists in the United Kingdom. In certain urgent cases the committee will issue a special warning letter to the professions.

Tranquillisers

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of prescriptions issued by doctors for powerful tranquillisers in each single year since 1979, giving a breakdown of their categories.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The estimated number of prescriptions issued by general practitioners and dispensed by retail chemists in England for sedatives and tranquillisers each year since 1979 was as follows:

	Million
1979	21·8
1983	17·6

This group includes all of those drugs likely to be considered powerful tranquillisers. It is not our practice to publish prescribing figures for individual proprietary drugs since these are of commercial value.

Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many cases have been referred to him for investigation as to whether a local authority is in breach of section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970; in how many cases he found that a prima facie case existed where an authority was in breach of that Act; in how many cases he made an order under section 36 of the National Assistance Act of 1948 declaring an authority to be in default; and what action he took in those cases where a prima facie case existed and in which he made no order under the National Assistance Act 1948 to ensure compliance;

(2) what steps will he take to monitor authorities which have previously been investigated and found to be in default of section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970.

Mr. Newton: Investigations of this nature are carried out only where there is prima facie evidence that a local authority may be in breach of its statutory duty. Since May 1979 we have made formal inquiries into 33 complaints of alleged default. On no occasion has default action proved necessary or appropriate in the light of these inquiries. One case is still under consideration.

Family Credit

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advantages he expects to accrue to to employers from the proposals for family credit set out in paragraph 4.50 of the Green Paper on social security.

Mr. Newton: More employees, or potential employees, for whom it is more clearly worthwhile to work rather than not to work; and fewer employees for whom extra effort produces a negative return.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will announce his decisions following consultation on the National Health Service scrutiny report on residential accommodation.

Mr. Fowler: The Health Service is one of the biggest landlords in this country. Altogether health authorities own over 100,000 flats bedsitters and houses. But, unlike other landlords, some health authorities have up to a fifth of their accommodation standing empty and most have more accommodation than they really need. It cannot make sense for the Health Service to have so much money tied up in property when it could be used to provide better services.

Clearly the Health Service must continue to provide accommodation for some staff — particularly young student nurses and junior doctors. Where accommodation is provided it must be brought up to standard—and we will expect health authorities to do this. In other cases, accommodation can be sold to the staff who live in it, often at a substantial discount. That is to their advantage as well as freeing health service resources.

After consulting all the interested parties in the Health Service, we have decided to ask health authorities to look again at their holdings of accommodation, to sell vacant stock quickly and to make plans which will mean that they keep in the long term only the property they really need.

A circular is being issued to health authorities shortly explaining the procedures they should follow and the criteria they should apply in working out local plans. I shall be asking the NHS Management Board to make sure that this process is followed through.

I hope that the new guidelines on the provision of accommodation in the National Health Service will be of benefit both to staff and the health service itself. Many Health Service staff will be able to buy the homes they now live in at a discount, and the Health Service, by selling accommodation which it no longer really needs, will have extra cash available both to improve the quality of the accommodation that it keeps and to invest in improving services to patients. This should mean that the Health Service will have many millions of pounds extra to spend over the next few years instead of being tied up in surplus property.

Health Authority (South-East Staffordshire)

Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each of the years 1978, 1982 and 1984 the number of doctors, nurses, ancillary and administrative staff employed by the South East Staffordshire District Health Authority.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 16 July 1985, c. 137-8]: Information at district level is not centrally available for 1978. Figures for the remaining years requested are shown in the table. Since such information as is centrally available does not cover all the years requested, or all categories of staff (see footnote ‡), my hon. Friend may care to seek further information from the chairman of the district health authority.

Doctors and Nurses (Pay)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the contributions which have been made by his Department in each year since 1979 towards doctors' and nurses' annual pay awards.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: Between 1979-80 and 1981-82 no adjustments were made during the financial year in regional health authorities' cash limit provision for the funding of pay awards. Estimated shortfalls were restored in the following year's cash limit. Figures by staff group are not readily available.

From 1982 onwards, the initial cash limits of health authorities did not include full provision for pay increases. The table shows the additions made to health authorities' initial cash limit provision in the years 1982-83 to 1984-85. The additions made in 1982-83 to 1984-85 were carried forward to the following years.

	Nurses and Midwives £ million	Doctors and Dentists £ million
1982-83	*45	13
1984-85	100	12

* Includes Professions Supplementary to Medicine.

† Initial cash limit provision for 1983-84 included full funding for the second stage of the 1982 settlement.

For 1985-86, we abandoned this system of mid-year adjustments to cash limits and set a cash limit to finance all the costs of providing services, including the cost of pay awards, within the year.

PRIME MINISTER

Community Service

Mr. Irving asked the Prime Minister (1) what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government with regard to the provision and promotion of community service;

(2) what has been the total value of Government funds allocated for the provision of community service in each of the last five years; and if she will give a departmental breakdown of the allocation of such funds in each year;

(3) if she will list in the Official Report the different types of community service in which each Government Department is currently involved; whether there are any plans to extend Government activity in these areas; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government's policy is to encourage and promote the provision of a wide range of opportunities for service to the community; and several Government Departments make funds available for this purpose. Because the concept of "community service" is such a wide one, it is not possible to provide a definitive list of every type of community service for which support is provided from Government funds. Nor can grant paid to support or encourage community service be separately identified in the available information relating to grants paid by Government Departments to voluntary organisations. But it is a characteristic of voluntary organisations that they exist to serve the needs of the community, and some indication of the increasing support which the Government have given to the development of community service can therefore be taken from those figures. Information relating to the five year period 1979-80 to 1983-84 is provided in the table. Figures for 1984-85 are not yet available, but they are likely to show a further increase. Within available resources, the Government will continue to look for ways of enabling more people to provide a service to the wider community.

Ethiopia (Hercules Aircraft)

Mr. Madden asked the Prime Minister when she intends to reply to the representations made by Church leaders for the Hercules aircraft food mission to be extended into 1986; whether she intends to accede to this request; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I replied to the Archbishop of Canterbury and his colleagues on 19 July, that a decision on the future of the airlift must await a report by the Minister for Overseas Development on his return from Ethiopia. As my right hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development told the House on 22 July, at columns 722-23, we have concluded that the Hercules detachment will be needed beyond the end of September. We have therefore offered the Ethiopian Government an extension of the airlift until the latter part of December.

Top Salaries

Mr. William Ross asked the Prime Minister if she will state the monthly increase of take-home salary for the categories of persons covered by the eighth report on top salaries at 1 April 1986 where the individual is married and receives only basic tax allowances.

The Prime Minister: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman shortly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Royal Commission on Legal Services

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Attorney-General how many of the recommendations for change made by the last Royal Commission on legal services in England have been implemented to date.

The Attorney-General: The White Paper "The Government Response to the Report of the Royal Commission on Legal Services" (Cmnd. 9077) published in November 1983 set out how matters then stood on the recommendations for which the Government are responsible. Of the matters then still under consideration, recommendation 9.3, which advocated access to a solicitor by persons taken into custody, will be implemented when section 58 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 comes into force on 1 January 1986, and recommendation 9.11, which pressed for legal representation to be available to prisoners in certain disciplinary proceedings, was implemented in April 1984. The Administration of Justice Bill presently before Parliament will, in the context of the extension of the right to undertake conveyancing for reward to properly qualified non-solicitors, implement recommendation 21.3 in part by extending the restrictions on conveyancing for reward to the preparation of the contract and will implement recommendation 21.4 by empowering local authority trading standards departments to institute proceedings for breach of the conveyancing restrictions. The Bill will also implement recommendation 16.4*(a)*, by empowering the Lord Chancellor to reimburse from public funds costs thrown away by the death or incapacity of a judge, and recommendation 25.13, by transferring the jurisdiction of the legal aid complaints tribunals to the profession's disciplinary tribunals.

Northern Ireland (Plastic Bullets)

Mr. McNamara asked the Attorney-General how many cases in 1985 involving persons injured by plastic bullets in Northern Ireland have been considered by the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland; and what action was taken in each case.

The Attorney-General: Figures for cases considered between 1 January 1985 and 30 June 1985 by the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland involving persons killed or injured by the alleged use of baton rounds are as follows:

	Number
Cases	7
Persons injured	13
Persons killed	1
Prosecution directed	1
No prosecution directed	4

In two cases a final direction pends the outcome of other proceedings or the submission to the Director of additional evidence.

TRANSPORT

Air Travel Reserve Fund

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has reached following the consultations on the future of the air travel reserve fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am grateful to all those who commented on the proposals for strengthening the present arrangements for protecting air package holiday makers. There was virtually unanimous support for the proposal that the Air Travel Reserve Fund Agency should be wound up, including from the agency itself, and the fund transferred to the Civil Aviation Authority to administer on a trustee basis. Some of those consulted were, however, concerned about questions of accountability under the new arrangements and, in particular, that the advisory committee which is to be set up under the new arrangements should be able to play a strong and independent role.

In the light of the consultations, I can confirm that the agency is to be wound up. But we are amending the new arrangements in some respects to meet the concerns which have been expressed.

The trustees of the fund will be members and officers of the CAA. My Department will draw up a trust deed. Amongst other matters, the deed will define what payments can be made from the fund. I would expect that in deciding what payments to make, the trustees' discretion would be no narrower than the discretion which bond administrators have in administering payments from tour operators' bonds. The trustees will have power to obtain banking, accountancy and other services; to delegate the settlement of eligible claims to bond administrators; and to decide on whether an on what terms top-up insurance should be arranged. The trust deed will be drawn up in a way which ensures flexible and speedy settlement of claims from holiday makers. The deed will also require the trustees to publish and submit to my right hon. Friend an annual report and accounts.

I received several suggestions that the trustees of the fund and the proposed advisory committee should be merged into a single body. I have not been able to accept this. The committee will include commercial interests and I have concluded that it would not be right for any trustee of the fund to be a person representative of a commercial interest in the travel trade.

But I am persuaded that the committee should enjoy greater stature and independence than was envisaged in my original proposals. To this end, it will be appointed by my right hon. Friend, and not by the CAA, for at least the first two or three years of its existence. It will have an independent chairman and its members will be drawn from the travel trade, the air transport users' committee, the trustees of the fund and independent representatives. I am pleased to say that Sir Peter Lane has agreed to serve as its first chairman, and we would expect to appoint members of the Air Travel Reserve Fund Agency to the committee.

The committee will exercise an important role in relation to the new arrangements for protecting holiday makers. Its terms of reference, which my right hon. Friend will draw up, will require it to advise on the operation of the fund and bonding arrangements; to guide the trustees of the fund on the use of their discretion when making payments, including the mechanisms for handling claims; and to seek a uniform approach from bond administrators when making payments from bonds. One of its early tasks will be to consider with the trustees the question of top-up insurance. My Department will also consult the committee on the principles of the trust deed to be drawn up.

The committee will be required to report annually to my right hon. Friend on its activities, at the same time as the annual report which the trustees must make. I would expect the committee, either in its report or at any other time, to draw attention to any problem areas where action is required. My right hon. Friend will ensure that copies of the annual reports from the trustees and the committee are available to Parliament when published.

An order to wind up the Air Travel Reserve Fund Agency and transfer the fund to the CAA will be laid early in the next Session. I would expect the committee to be appointed in good time to advise on the transition to the new arrangements, including the principles of a trust deed. Subject to the committee's views on the transitional arrangements, the agency will probably be wound up at the end of February next year. Sir Kenneth Selby will remain chairman of the agency until then.

My right hon. Friend and I wish to place on record our gratitude for, and appreciation of, the vital role played by the agency over the last 10 years in bringing peace of mind to holiday makers. Sir Kenneth Selby, as chairman, and members of the agency past and present have devoted many hours of unpaid service to ensuring that holiday makers do not suffer financially from the collapse of a tour operator.

I believe that the new arrangements will build on the agency's pioneering work and will give air package holiday makers an even better and more flexible system of financial protection. The Government will in due course seek powers whereby the CAA can replenish the fund, once it has taken it over, by means of a levy on ATOL holders. With the improvements which are being made to the system, however, I can see no reason at present why the CAA should need to impose a fresh levy for the foreseeable future.

A1 (Hatfield)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress on upgrading the A1 to motorway status at Hatfield, on the resolving of difficulties for local residents relating to construction work, and on the expected environmental impact of the completed project.

Mrs. Chalker: This complex scheme is on schedule for completion in April 1987. A noise barrier has been erected along the eastern boundary of the tunnel section to screen adjacent houses during construction work.

Regular bulletins are issued to keep local residents informed, especially of traffic diversions, and the resident engineer's office is there to try to resolve any difficulties. On completion the cut-and-cover tunnel will reduce the environmental impact of the new motorway.

Departmental Committees of Inquiry

Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 8 May, Official Report, column 396, if he will now take steps to provide information on departmental committees of inquiry established from 1974 to 1979.

Mr. Ridley: The following is a list of committees of inquiry whose reports were published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office between 1974 and 1979 compiled from the annual catalogues of Her Majesty's Stationery Office publications. It would not be possible, except at disproportionate cost, to verify that this list is comprehensive.

Subject of investigation	Chairman	Date established	Date of report
Channel Tunnel and Alternative Cross Channel Services	Sir Alec Cairncross	April 1974	1975
Trunk Road Assessment	Sir George Leitch	December 1976	1977
Motorway Service Areas	Peter J. Prior	November 1977	1978
Road Haulage Operators' Licensing	Christopher D. Foster	December 1977	1978

Manchester-Blackpool Railway Line

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he last met the chairman of British Rail, he raised with him the electrification of the Manchester-Blackpool line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. British Rail sees no financial case under its normal investment criteria for electrifying this route. But Lancashire county council and the Greater Manchester council believe they can justify the additional costs by taking other benefits into account. Exploratory discussions have been held and the councils will be supplying further information about their proposals.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in negotiating the basis upon which United States airlines may operate direct scheduled services to Manchester as referred to in paragraph 6.31 in the airports policy White Paper.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Immediately after publication of the White Paper, arrangements were made with the United States Government for consultations to take place at the beginning of August.

Driving Instructors

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list those organisations representing the interests of driving instructors which were consulted by his Department about the trainee licensing system during the passage of the Road Traffic (Driving Instruction) Act 1984; and, in the case of each of these organisations, whether they were broadly in favour of the abolition of the trainee licensing system;

(2) if he will list those organisations representing the interests of driving instructors that have made representations to his Department favouring (a) the retention of the trainee licensing system and (b) against the retention of the trainee licensing system.

Mrs. Chalker: Six national driving instructor organisations were consulted, along with other interested bodies, prior to the introduction of the Bill which became the Road Traffic (Driving Instruction) Act 1984, on proposals for changes in the trainee driving instructor licensing system. There was no consultation with the organisations during the passage of the Bill.

Representations against retention of the trainee licensing system were made by the following driving instructor organisations:

National Joint Council of Approved Driving Instructors Organisations
National Association of Approved Driving Instructors
Royal Automobile Club Register of Instructors

The following driving instructor organisations generally accepted retention of the trainee licensing system, with the changes provided for in the Act:

Driving Instructors' Association
Motor Schools Association
Driving Instructors' Scottish Council

Seat Belts

Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the mandatory fitting of rear seat belts in the light of the recommendation in the Transport Committee report on road safety.

Mrs. Chalker: I welcome this recommendation from the Select Committee. Rear seat belts have great potential for saving lives and reducing injuries, and it is right that they should be fitted to new cars to provide rear seat passengers with the opportunity to protect themselves. It is also most important that parents should be encouraged to provide child restraints for younger children. The Department is therefore circulating draft regulations which would make rear seat belts or child restraints a legal requirement for all new cars manufactured from October 1986, and first registered from April 1987. The draft regulations provide for different types of belt or restraint to be fitted so as to meet European Community obligations and to allow individuals to choose the most suitable type of belt for themselves or restraints for their children. The regulations also require a seat belt to be fitted in the centre front seat of cars and light vehicles where such a seat is provided.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement updating the information contained in his reply to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish, Official Report 21 December, column 363, concerning grain supplies and supplementary food and edible oil requirements in Ethiopia.

Mr. Raison: The total cereal requirement for famine relief in Ethiopia in 1985 has been estimated at 1·5 million tonnes. So far some 780,000 have been delivered.

Supplementary food needs (skimmed milk powder and high protein biscuits) are estimated at about 106,000 tonnes; 53,000 tonnes have been pledged and nearly 36,000 tonnes delivered.

Edible oil requirements are not known; 36,500 tonnes have been pledged and 30,200 tonnes have been delivered.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the work of the RAF Hercules on famine relief in Ethiopia; and for how long that work will continue.

Mr. Raison: I refer the hon. Member to the statement I made in the House on 22 July at columns 722-23.

Crown Agents

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the 1984 report and accounts of the Crown Agents holding and realisation board will be laid before Parliament.

Mr. Raison: The 1984 report and accounts are being laid before Parliament today. As soon as they are available, published copies of the report and accounts will be placed in the Library of both Houses.

ODA Report

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to publish the next annual review of the Overseas Development Administration.

Mr. Raison: The third annual review of the work of the Overseas Development Administration, entitled "British Overseas Aid 1984", is published today price £6·95, and will be available from HMSO bookshops. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses and are available on request from the Vote Office.

EMPLOYMENT

Chemical Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of employees and the number of operatives in the chemical industry to match the table in column 369 of the Official Report, 9 March 1982.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following table gives, annually from 1973 to 1981, the estimated number of employees in employment in Great Britain in the chemical industry (Order V of the 1968 standard industrial classification). It also gives the numbers of operatives included in the totals. Quarterly figures are not available for the number of operatives.

Chemical industry—Great Britain (thousands)

	Total employees in employment	Operatives included in total
October 1973	425	255
October 1974	444	272
October 1975	424	251
October 1976	429	262
October 1977	434	263
October 1978	433	263
October 1979	432	257
October 1980	416	244
September 1981	392	239

Cider

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of people employed directly in cider making during each of the last five years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Department's employment estimates are analysed according to the 1980 standard industrial classification which does not separately distinguish cider making.

Football Grounds

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will now make a statement on the conclusions of his discussions about extending community programme support for work on football league grounds.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government are awaiting receipt of the interim report from Mr. Justice Popplewell before deciding what role the community programme can play in improving the safety of football league grounds.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many of those registered for employment at jobcentres in the parliamentary constituency of Southampton, Itchen on 7 June were resident in that constituency.

Mr. Alan Clark: This information is not available in the form requested. The only information available relates to the total numbers registered at a particular jobcentre.

Job Release Scheme

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the 1985 increases in job release scheme allowances.

Mr. Alan Clark: Some 200 Members of Parliament and others have written to my right hon. Friend about the 1985 increase in allowances.

Information Technology Centres

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are being taken to provide additional equipment grants and help with staff salaries to enable information technology centres to continue to work.

Mr. Peter Morrison [pursuant to his reply, 19 July 1985, c. 297-98]: The Manpower Services Commission has made available extra funds to enable those information technology centres exhausting their entitlement to the Department of Trade and Industry's financial support to sustain staff salaries at the levels previously paid. This transitional funding by the Commission will be available until the end of October 1985 when each centre completing its first three years of operation should be in a position to operate without further pump-priming funding from the Department of Trade and Industry.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools (Transport and Meals)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the amount spent by local authorities on (a) school transport and (b) schools meals in the latest year for which figures are available, the forecast for 1985 and the amount in 1978-79—all at 1985 prices.

Mr. Dunn: Actual expenditure by local education authorities in England on home to school transport and on school meals, in 1978-79 and 1983-84, the latest year for which firm information is available, is given in the following table, together with the Government's plans for spending on these areas, as set out in Cmnd. 9428. All figures are at 1985-86 prices.

	1978-79	1983-84	1985-86
Home to School transport*	205	194	198
School Meals†	726	468	280

* The figures cover maintained nursery, primary, secondary and special schools. Expenditure on transport other than home to school—eg.—travelling expenses for educational visits, sports etc.—is not included. Income from parental contributions, if any, has been deducted from expenditure to arrive at a net figure.

† The fall in expenditure in real terms reflects the effects of the changes to the school meals service following the Education Act 1980 under which the duty of LEAs to provide free school meals for pupils other than those whose parents are in receipt of Supplementary Benefit and Family Income Supplement was removed. The Act also gave authorities the power to set their own charge for meals. The Government's plans for spending on school meals in 1985-86 and for later years assume that all authorities will take steps to curb overspending on school meals provision.

Open University

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the percentage of disabled students who registered with the Open University in 1971 who have now graduated; if he will list the total number of disabled students who have graduated from the Open University; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: In answer to the first part of the question, about 80 per cent.; the second, over 1,400. The Open University has a notable record in providing for disabled students, and the visiting committee recommended in January that it should continue to ensure that, as far as practicable, such students should be able to study on equal terms with other students. I am happy to endorse that recommendation.

Free School Meals

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the number receiving free school meals in Burnley at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn: Figures are collected annually in October in the school meals census from each local education authority as a whole. Burnley is not a local education authority but forms part of Lancashire local education authority and separate figures for Burnley are not available centrally. Copies of the latest school meals census for Autumn 1984 are available in the Library.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children have a current statutory entitlement to free school meals in (a) the London borough of Camden, (b) the London borough of Barnet, (c) Greater London and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras, respectively.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not available centrally. The Department's annual school meals census collects data from each LEA on the number of children who actually take a free meal on the October census day. Copies of the census are available in the Library.

Educational Maintenance Allowance

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the cost per academic year of providing an educational maintenance allowance to every pupil aged between 16 and 19 years in full-time education at the weekly rate of (a) £26·25 and (b) £27·30 for 40 weeks and subjecting the allowance to tax as part of the parental income and part of the income sum in calculations for family eligibility to social security.

Sir Keith Joseph: Approximately (a) £460 million and (b) £480 million after allowing for deductions in respect of child benefit and existing education maintenance allowances and grants to 16 to 19-year-olds in non-advanced further education. Tax and social security benefits are dependent on individual circumstances and it is not therefore possible to make generalised assumptions in relation to them.

Inner London Education Authority (Teachers' Salaries)

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are current salary rates for all teaching grades employed by the Inner London education authority for each grade, what is the inner London weighting allowance; if he will estimate the consequences of a 6·9 per cent. increase in salary rates, giving the revised pay scales; and if there are any proposals to increase the London weighting allowance.

Sir Keith Joseph: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Further Education (Court Decision)

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he proposes to take in response to the judgment of the divisional court that his decision not to change the formula for the pooling of advanced further education expenditure for 1985-86 was an unlawful decision.

Sir Keith Joseph: In the light of the court's judgment I have decided to make proposals for a new formula for the determination of the appropriate contributions of local education authorities to the advanced further education (AFE) pools in 1985-86 and subsequent financial years. These proposals are based upon the number of AFE students resident in each authority's area. I am under a duty to consult the local authority associations about them and the Department has now begun this process. Following that consultation I shall make and lay before the House regulations incorporating a new formula.

Social Background

Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make available the results of the research commissioned by his Department and undertaken by the University of Leeds in the area of social background and educational achievement.

Sir Keith Joseph: Yes. Copies of a summary report of the project are now available from DES on request. Copies are also being placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report those organisations who were consulted about the 60 per cent. requirement in relation to children entering the assisted places scheme from the maintained sector; and whether he will give details of the form of the consultative process.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985 c. 349]: The minimum proportion of entrants from the maintained sector was one of the matters covered in the general consultative document issued in July 1979 to the local authority associations, voluntary bodies, teachers' associations and representatives of the independent schools.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will state the number of pupils who, at the time of selection for an assisted place, were choirboys; what proportion of the relevant age group entering the scheme this represents; and what proportion of all assisted places pupils entering the scheme from the private sector this represents.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985, c. 350]: Information on individual pupils taking part in the assisted places scheme is not collected by the Department.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report a breakdown by age group of the pupils entering the assisted places scheme who attended a private school at the time of their selection for the scheme; and how many and what proportion of each group attended the same school before and after their entry to the scheme.

Mr Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985, c. 350]: Of the pupils admitted to assisted places in the school year 1984-85, 1,129 at ages 11-15 and 609 sixth formers came from other than publicly maintained schools. Information on whether this involved a change of school is not collected by the Department.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Refreshment Facilities (Visitors)

Mr. Proctor asked the Lord Privy Seal if the Services Committee will consider making refreshment facilities available in the House for large parties of Members' constituents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: It is unlikely that accommodation could be provided within the Palace for this purpose; but I understand that the Catering Sub-Committee is already investigating the possibility that, in the context of phase 1 of the Bridge street re-development, the Refreshment Department might make use of the upper floors of St. Stephen's Tavern to provide such a service on a commercial basis. I will refer my hon. Friend's question to the Sub-Committee.

ENERGY

Productivity

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Energy by how much productivity has increased in (a) the coal mining industry, (b) the electricity industry and (c) the gas industry since the end of 1980; and how these figures compare with the economy as a whole.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: No specific productivity indices comparable with those compiled and published for the economy as a whole are readily available for the coal mining, electricity and gas industies. However, figures of coal output per man-shift at NCB mines are published monthly in Energy Trends, copies of which are available in the Library.

International Energy Agency

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the meeting in Paris on 9 July of the Governing Board of the International Energy Agency at ministerial level.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The governing board of the International Energy Agency met at ministerial level in Paris on Tuesday 9 July under the chairmanship of Dr. Van Aardenne of the Netherlands. I represented the United Kingdom. Copies of the communiqué are available in the Libraries of the House.

IEA Ministers reaffirmed their belief that a risk of renewed dependence on oil could arise in the 1990s with a projected tightening of the world energy supply/demand situation. They welcomed the structural adjustments of the past decade and stressed the need to maintain progress towards the more efficient use of energy and enhanced collaboration in research and development.

New refineries in countries outside the IEA (particularly in the Middle East and North Africa) will be adding to the world supply of refined products over the next few years. Ministers took the view that it should be possible for these additional quantities to find markets without causing disruption, provided the impact was not concentrated in particular regions. They therefore agreed on a common approach to maintain or create conditions to permit this. The IEA will continue to monitor developments in this area.

National Coal Board

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the National Coal Board's financial limits for the current year.

Mr. Peter Walker: After the NUM dispute the National Coal Board reviewed thoroughly its financial forecasts for the present year. These forecasts have been discussed between my Department and the Board, and I have now set the following financial limits for 1985-86.

The National Coal Board's EFL for 1985-86 has been revised from the provisional figure of £723 million to £929 million. The board's capital approval is £725 million. In setting the deficit grant limit of £306 million in respect of 1985-86 I have taken into account inclusion in the board's deficit for 1984-85 of a provision of £342 million for directly strike-related losses which are expected to arise in the present year.

ENVIRONMENT

Anti-fouling Paint

Mr. Ward asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has completed his consideration of the responses to the consultation paper and proposals to control the supply and use of anti-fouling paint containing organotin compounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have received about 1,000 responses to our consultation paper and draft regulations to control the supply of these paints for use on small boats, which we issued last February. Despite many objections to the proposals, no serious challenge to the scientific evidence has been made.

The Government remain convinced that measures must be taken urgently to protect shellfish, plants and other marine life from dangerous concentrations of this poison. The paint industry needs a reasonable time to develop improved and alternative products which are acceptable to boat owners and thereby ensure that any controls which are introduced are effective. We have, therefore, decided on an approach which it is intended will lead to an environmental improvement and which will include an assessment of the effects on the environment whilst allowing the paint industry and its customers time to adjust.

The Government intend to ban the supply of "free association" organotin-based paints to small boat owners. In addition, maximum levels will be set for the organotin content of "copolymer" paints and of other anti-fouling paints using organotin compounds to boost their performance. These will be based on the lowest levels of organotin present in such paints generally available to boat owners at present. These levels will be reviewed in time for the 1987 painting season with a view to reducing them in line with advances in paint technology.

With effect from 1 January 1986 we intend to introduce controls to prevent the supply of the following types of anti-fouling paint to chandlers and other retailers.

(a) those copolymer formulations containing more than 7·5 per cent. organotin (measured as tin in the dry paint film); and

(b) those paints based on copper or other anti-fouling systems containing more than 2·5 per cent. organotin (measured in the same way).

In effect (b) will ban the supply of existing "free association" paints while allowing the minimum use of organotin compounds as a performance booster in other anti-fouling systems.

To aid our consideration of future action, the Government propose to consult the water authorities as soon as possible on the establishment of an ambient water quality target. The existing monitoring programme at the Fisheries Laboratory, Burnham-on-Crouch will be supplemented and my Department will set up machinery to co-ordinate this and related work being carried out by other agencies. I would welcome co-ordination of this programme with work commissioned by the Royal Yachting Association and by the paint industry.

In order to avoid repetition of the serious problems which have arisen in this case, the Government will invite the paint industry to co-operate with the Government in a screening procedure for all proposed anti-fouling agents in future so that these can be assessed for environmental safety before they are introduced into use.

Finally, to minimise the impact on water quality in sensitive areas of scraping down and repainting, I will be seeking the co-operation of boating interests, the paint industry and others in preparing authoritative guidance on these operations, giving particular attention to the proper disposal of residues.

The effectiveness of these actions and the progress made towards achieving the water quality target will be reviewed before the end of 1987 to determine the extent to which further controls are needed. The Commission of the European Communities has informed the Government that it intends bringing forward a proposal for Community action. The Government welcome this and will support appropriate action through the European Community which would complement action taken nationally.

Sports Council Grants

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much per head was paid out in the last five years in Sports Council grants (a) in England and (b) in each of the Sports Council's regions;

(2) how much has been expended in Sports Council grants in each of the last five years broken down by region and county;

(3) what major projects in the last five years have received Sports Council grants in (a) the east of England and (b) Suffolk.

Mr. Macfarlane: Sports Council grant expenditure over the past five years, total and per capita, nationally and broken down by Sports Council regions, is shown in the table. A breakdown by county is not available.

Litter Act 1983

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received requesting the implementation of section 4 of the Litter Act 1983; when he plans to implement that section; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have had representations from six individuals or bodies requesting implementation of this section, which requires local authorities to prepare litter abatement plans. There are no proposals at the moment to implement this section, in view of the need for restraint in public expenditure.

Housing Defects (Manchester)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to the recent report on housing defects in Manchester, a copy of which has been sent to him; what action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gow: I have read this report with interest. Together with Manchester city council's response to my Department's inquiry into the repair and improvement needs of local authority housing, it provides valuable information on the condition of the council's housing stock and will be relevant to the consideration, this autumn, of Manchester's housing investment programme for 1986-87.

The city council places great emphasis on spending more public money, as the solution to the problems which it has identified. I urge the council to consider alternative options, especially the potential for involving the private sector in refurbishment schemes.

Departmental Committees of Inquiry

Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 2 May, Official Report, column 183, if he will now take steps to provide the information on departmental committees of inquiry established since 1974.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The information is set out in the following table. As central records were not maintained throughout the period I cannot guarantee that the list is complete.

Subject of Investigation	Chairman	Date established	Date of Report
Local Government Finance	F. Layfield QC	June 1974	May 1976
Remuneration of Members of Local Authorities	D. Robinson	November 1976	December 1977
Disposal of Radioactive Waste in North East Atlantic (in conjunction with MAFF and the TUC)	Professor F. G. T. Holliday	April 1984	November 1984
Conduct of Local Authority Business	D. Widdicombe QC	February 1985	—
Handling of Geographic Information	Lord Chorley	April 1985	—

The list excludes standing advisory committees and planning inquiries.

Ordnance Survey (Archival Material)

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the reply of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Hazel Grove, Official Report, 10 June, column 315, what value he places on the archival material used in the Ordnance Survey's commercial ventures; and how this valuation is calculated.

Mr. Waldegrave: Ordnance Survey's commercial ventures draw upon the whole range of its mappings. This archive has been built up over decades and cannot be strictly valued in monetary terms.

Waterfowl (Lead Fishing Weights)

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number of wildfowl other than swans that have died as a result of eating lead fishing weights; and as to the trend in such deaths in recent years.

Mr. Waldegrave: There is little existing evidence to suggest that waterfowl other than swans are affected by ingesting lead from fishing weights.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many swans are estimated to have died as a result of eating lead fishing weights in each of the last five years; what were the comparable figures for the years 1970 to 1975 and 1960 to 1965; and to what factors the variations are attributed.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Nature Conservancy Council's report on lead poisoning in swans, produced in 1981, estimated that 3,000-3,500 swan deaths annually were due to lead poisoning. A report to the Nature Conservancy Council working party on swans in January 1985 estimated the number of deaths annually to be between 3,370 and 4,190. The later figure is higher because the increased number of post-mortem examinations carried out since 1981 suggest a higher death rate should be used in the calculations. I regret that there are no comparable figures for earlier years.

Houses (Multi-occupation)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to bring forward changes in legislation concerning houses in multi-occupation.

Sir George Young: None at present. My Department is carrying out research which involves an examination of the condition of houses in multiple-occupation and local authorities' use of existing legislation. I wish to see the outcome of this research before deciding whether further measures are necessary. The timetable for this research was set out in the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, Moorlands (Mr. Knox) on 3 June, at columns 33-34.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any recent representations regarding legislation on houses in multi-occupation.

Sir George Young: Yes. I have received several representations from Members of Parliament, professional bodies, interested organisations and the general public. They have been reminded of the wide range of powers available to local authorities for securing improved conditions in houses in multiple-occupation and of the action which the Government has already taken to strengthen some of these powers.

Housing (Public Expenditure)

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the percentage reduction in real terms on net public expenditure on housing since 1979.

Sir George Young: The years from 1979 have seen a major shift in the balance between housing provision in the public and private sectors. Between 1979-80 and 1984-85 net public expenditure on housing fell by 54 per cent. in real terms. Between December 1979 and December 1984, home ownership in England rose by 1·5 million to a total of 11·691 million owner-occupiers.

Water Industry (Productivity)

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much productivity has increased in the water industry since the end of 1980; and how that figure compares with the economy as a whole.

Mr. Macfarlane: Regional water authority manpower has reduced by 18 per cent. since the end of 1980, and the authorities taken together have met demanding performance aims for operating costs while improving levels of service, but no precise productivity measure for the industry is available. Output per person employed in the economy as a whole, seasonally adjusted, increased by about 13 per cent. to the end of March.

Housing Association Schemes (GLC)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangement he proposes to make, following abolition, for dealing with housing association schemes originally funded by the Greater London council, and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Proposals for dealing with these schemes were set out in the October 1983 housing consultation paper, a copy of which was placed in the Library. Following consideration of the representations received, my right hon. Friend has decided that on abolition of the GLC, these proposals should be broadly maintained. Thus the councils of the London boroughs will become responsible for funding ex-GLC housing association schemes in their areas still in progress on abolition day. They will also assume responsibility for the GLC-funded schemes where work has been completed but where final grant payments are still under consideration by the Department. They will also become the lending authority for any completed schemes previously funded by the GLC but where new involvement by a lending authority is required, for example in respect of major repairs, including those GLC-financed schemes which up to 31 March 1968 received funds from the Housing Corporation.

The Housing Corporation normally looks to local authorities to fund housing associations in respect of schemes which were originally funded by local authorities but where further funding is now required. They have already announced that their funding of major repairs to a small number of schemes originally funded by the GLC will cease on 31 March 1986. They will, however, continue to fund certain re-improvements to ex-GLC schemes.

After abolition, loan repayments on completed housing association schemes which would have been made to the GLC will be paid to the London Residuary Body, who will be responsible for servicing the outstanding debt on such schemes.

The GLC has also funded housing association schemes of a London-wide significance, for example in providing for the single homeless. It will be for the London boroughs to decide either individually or collectively, in conjunction with the Housing Corporation, how best to continue this initiative.

In addition, the GLC are also at present providing rate fund contributions to offset revenue losses incurred by some housing associations. While we do not intend to make any special arrangements in respect of such funding, individual cases will be considered on their merits within the normal rules for revenue deficit grant.

The London boroughs have been invited to bid for housing investment programme allocations in respect of schemes hitherto funded by the GLC. They have been assured that the resources which would have been available to the GLC will after abolition be distributed amongst the boroughs.

Departmental Management Information System

Dr. Blackburn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will release the latest statement from his Department's management information system for Ministers (MINIS).

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: As in previous years, I am placing a set of MINIS 6 statements for the Department of the Environment and the Property Services Agency in the Library. They describe the organisation and work of the Department during 1984-85, and show suggested plans for 1985-86. They are also on sale to the public.

Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has now received the annual report of the Radioactive Waste Management Advisory Committee.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Yes. The sixth annual report of RWMAC will be published shortly, and I will then place copies in the Library of the House. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and I are grateful to the chairman, Professor Paul Matthews FRS, and to the members of the committee, for their valuable work over the past year in advancing thinking on this vital subject, and we shall continue to take full account of their views in developing and implementing the national strategy for waste management.

Severn-Trent Water Authority

Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to make any changes to the Severn-Trent water authority's external financing limit for 1985-86.

Mr. Gow: The Severn-Trent regional water authority's external financing limit for 1985-86 has been increased from £22 million to £55·2 million. This covers the cost of refinancing £202·5 million of the authority's outstanding National Loans Fund debt. The authority will benefit from future lower interest payments and external financing requirements as a result of the refinancing. The increase has been charged to the reserve and does not add to the public expenditure planning total.

Council House Sales

Mr. Michael Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update the table giving information on sales of dwellings by each local authority in England which was referred to in the answer given to the hon. Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle) on 3 April, Official Report, columns 669-70.

Mr. Gow: I have today placed in the Library the latest figures, to which my hon. Friend refers, giving information reported by each local authority in England on the progress of council house sales to the end of March 1985.

GLC (Town Development Agreements)

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he proposes to make for the allocation, following abolition of the Greater London council's rights and liabilities, under agreements under the Town Development Act 1952.

Sir George Young: As I indicated in my written answer to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 23 November 1984, at column 315, the London Residuary Body will assume the GLC's liabilities under existing town development agreements. The GLC's tenancy nomination rights under those agreements will be transferred to the Secretary of State. It is his intention to exercise those nomination rights through the National Mobility Steering Committee. Any other GLC rights under the town development agreements will pass to the London Residuary Body.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of houses on London Docklands Development Corporation-owned land (a) represent transfers to households which were previously on other London Docklands Development Corporation-owned sites and (b) are owned by the second or subsequent purchasers of the house.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: The information is not collected.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the London Docklands Development Corporation requires clauses in its contracts of employment to specify that racial and sexual harassment at work is a disciplinary issue.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: Yes.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements exist for advertising posts in the London Docklands Development Corporation; and which newspapers, including black and ethnic minority newspapers, are used to place adverts.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: The corporation advertises vacancies both internally and externally. The following newspapers and journals are used:

Accountancy Age
Architects Journal
Barking and Dagenham Express
Building Design
Campaign
Caribbean Times
Chartered Surveyor Weekly
Computing
East London Advertiser
Essex Gazette
Financial Decision
Financial Times
The Guardian
Local Government Chronicle
Marketing
Newham Recorder Opportunities
Planning
South London Press
The Sunday Times
The Telegraph
The Times

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many advisers the London Docklands Development Corporation employs with a specific knowledge of relevant employment and equal opportunity legislation.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: The corporation employs one personnel consultant and draws on the services of two other consultants who have a specific knowledge of employment and equal opportunity legislation.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people with disabilities are employed by the London Docklands Development Corporation; and at what grades.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: The corporation employs two registered disabled people, both in APTC grades.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many women are employed by the London Docklands Development Corporation; and at what grades.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: The corporation employs 35 permanent female staff; 10 in professional posts and 25 in administrative, professional, technical and clerical (APTC) grades. In addition, the corporation also employs 26 females on fixed term contracts; five at professional level and 21 in APTC grades.

Rosehill Estate, Willenhall

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now make a statement arising from the deputation seen by officials on 18 July on what action is to be taken to ensure that the Walsall council has sufficient resources to undertake the modernisation of Rosehill estate, Willenhall.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1985]: My officials have given me a full account of the points made by the hon. Member and tenants from the Rosehill estate at their meeting on 18 July. I have now written to the hon. Member on the matter.

I understand the strong wishes of many of the tenants that something should be done to improve conditions on the estate. However, it is for Walsall district council to decide what action to take within the context of its housing programme as a whole. In addition to the HIP allocation of £9·5 million for 1985-86, Walsall has received a supplementary capital allocation of £627,000. Apart from some further small amounts to be allocated among authorities with difficulties in meeting their obligations under the Housing Defects Act, there are no further resources available for distribution this year. Before the HIP allocations for 1986-87 are made, Walsall will have an opportunity to explain its needs and the points which the hon. Member and the tenants from the Rosehill estate have made will also be taken into account.

SCOTLAND

Broadleaved Woodlands

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is yet in a position to announce the outcome of the Forestry Commission's review of policy for broadleaved woodlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: The Forestry Commission has now completed its review after wide consultations covering a period of some two and a half years, and my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Wales and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and I have agreed new policy initiatives designed to maintain and enhance the value of Britain's broadleaved woodlands for timber production, landscape, recreation and nature conservation.

The new policy will have a number of complementary aims. It is the Government's wish to ensure that the broadleaved character of the well-wooded parts of the country is maintained and improved and to see broadleaved woodlands established in areas where they are scarce, including areas on the periphery of towns and cities. The maintenance and greater use of broadleaves in the uplands will also be encouraged, particularly where they will add to the beauty of the landscape and the wildlife interest; this will apply equally to the extensive conifer plantations which have been established in the uplands in response to our continuing policy of expanding home timber supplies. Encouragement will also be given to the greater use of broadleaved woodlands generally for conservation, recreation, sport and landscape, as well as for wood production. In particular, steps will be taken to ensure that the special interest of the ancient semi-natural woodlands is recognised and maintained. Essential to these objectives is the need to increase the quality and value of timber produced by broadleaved woodlands. We also consider it important to the success of these new policy aims that they are pursued with a reasonable degree of flexibility and within the framework of an essentially voluntary approach which harnesses the interest and goodwill of landowners, farmers and foresters.

A number of new measures will be introduced to achieve these policy aims, both for the long term and to afford more immediate protection for existing woodlands; they will apply equally to woodlands under the direct management of the Forestry Commission and to those in private or other ownership. These measures are outlined below. Full details will be given in a Foresty Commission booklet to be published shortly.

Among the long-term measures, the Forestry Commission will be designating a senior officer in each of its seven Conservancies who will be responsible for co-ordinating the advice already available from a wide variety of Government and non-Government sources on the establishment and management of broadleaved woodlands; for stimulating new planting in poorly-wooded areas and the better management of existing woods, by means of promotional activities and practical demonstrations; and for assembling and disseminating information on the marketing of produce and the encouragement of co-operative marketing ventures. These officers will be supported by the Commission's 70 Forest District Managers and their staffs in each locality. The Commission will also be arranging training—both for its own staff and for advisers in other Government departments and agencies and in the voluntary movement — in the various aspects of broadleaved woodland management, including landscape design, wildlife conservation and the provision of recreation and will be promoting further research into the measures required to enhance the conservation value of broadleaved woodlands and the development of less costly establishment techniques.

A new Forestry Commission grant scheme, to be known as the broadleaved woodland grant scheme, will be introduced on 1 October 1985. It is designed to assist in bringing neglected woodlands back into use for a variety of purposes, to help meet the cost of creating new multi-purpose woodlands; and has particular relevance to farm woodlands, especially in the lowlands. Significantly higher rates of grant will be offered under this new scheme, as shown in table 1, for the use of broadleaved species on their own and the rate of grant will be determined by the area planted and not by the size of the wood in which planting takes place. Details of the new scheme, which will be closely monitored and funded within the Forestry Commission's planned expenditure, will be published shortly by the Commission. Broadleaves in mixture with conifers will be grant-aided under the forestry grant scheme, which will continue as a separate scheme.

In addition to the Forestry Commission's grant-aid schemes, which all have wood production as one of their aims, there are other sources of finance available for planting broadleaved trees for other purposes, notably those administered by the Countryside Commissions and local authorities for amenity planting, which are designed to dovetail with the Forestry Commission's grants.

At this point, it would be appropriate to inform the House that the levels of grant available under the Commission's Basis II and III Dedication Schemes and the Forestry Grant Scheme have recently been reviewed by the Forestry Commissioners under the agreed biennial review arrangements, and my right hon. Friends and I have endorsed their proposal that the planting grants under those schemes should be increased from 1 October 1984.

Management grants, available only under the dedication schemes, will remain at the present levels. The revised rates of planting grant are shown in tables 2 and 3. These will give rise to an increase in expenditure of about 5 per cent. in a full year.

Before the start of the broadleaved woodland grant scheme, the Forestry Commission also plans to publish, after further discussions with the Environment Departments, the Nature Conservancy Council, the Countryside Commissions and appropriate non-Government bodies, general guidance on the management considerations appropriate to various types of broadleaved woodlands. The Forestry Commission will have regard to this guidance, both in its own operations and in considering applications for grant aid or felling permission. This should make the Commission's consultations with other interested authorities easier and lead in time to a reduced requirement for consultation where the proposed management is in accordance with the guidelines, although it is intended that local authorities would continue to be informed of proposals of particular interest to them. It is recognised that there is a growing public interest in broadleaved woodlands. The Forestry Commission will be taking this into account in considering ways and means of making the proceedings of its regional advisory committees more open when they are dealing with disputed applications for grant aid or felling permission, as announced by my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secrtary of State for the Environment, in his response to the Countryside Commission's report "A Better Future for the Uplands" on 31 January 1985 at column 287.

Finally, while we do not think there is a case for any change in the tax law, we will consider whether, within the existing rules, ancient semi-natural broadleaved woodlands should be able to qualify for exemption from capital taxation in recognition of their heritage value.

To afford more immediate protection against the depletion of existing woodlands, my right hon. Friends and I have endorsed the Forestry Commission's proposal to reduce the volume of timber—both broadleaved and conifer—which may be felled without a licence from 30 cubic metres to 5 cubic metres per quarter, with a reduction in the volume of such timber that may be sold from 5·5 cubic metres to 2 cubic metres. The Forestry Commissioners will be introducing an order shortly to give effect to this under their powers contained in section 9(5)(c) of the Forestry Act 1967. For similar reasons, I have also decided not to proceed with the proposal I announced in my statement to the House on 27 May 1982 to exempt silvicultural thinnings from felling controls. Allied to these changes, the Forestry Commission will continue, in its administration of the statutory felling controls, to operate a general presumption against the granting of clear-felling permissions where the intention is to convert woodland to other uses, and to prosecute those responsible for unauthorised felling. Full details of these changes will be published in a revised version of the Commission's leaflet "Control of Tree Felling".

The successful establishment of broadleaved woodlands is often frustrated by the damage done by grey squirrels, and the Forestry Commission intends to set up local squirrel control groups with the co-operation of the private sector to control such damage in vulnerable broadleaved woodlands through the effective application of known methods. Further details will be published in due course in a Forestry Commission leaflet.

Among other initiatives directed at the protection of existing woodlands, the register of ancient woodland now being compiled on a provisional basis by the Nature Conservancy Council will be completed as soon as possible. This will show where positive management in the interests of conservation is particularly required. The Tree Council is preparing a leaflet which will give advice on ways of ensuring the good management of trees and woodlands which are subject to tree preservation orders. Such orders are seen as a last resort for the protection of broadleaved woodland, and local authorities are encouraged to continue to seek management agreements with landowners for the proper management of their broadleaved woodlands in appropriate circumstances.

Broadleaved woodlands form a significant part of our national heritage. The Government are firmly committed, through the initiatives I have announced, to stemming their depletion—particularly that of the ancient woodlands—to making good the years of neglect from which many small, but important broadleaved woods have suffered, and to encouraging the formation of new ones. We have asked the Forestry Commission to report regularly on the operation and effectiveness of the new measures and we shall review them after some three years.

Now that our policy has been determined, we look to the many interests concerned—including the Forestry Commission, woodland owners, the Nature Conservancy Council, the Countryside Commissions and voluntary bodies—to work together in a spirit of co-operation to make it a success.

Re-Chem International (Lenihan Report)

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the detailed studies called for in the Lenihan report on Re-Chem International Ltd. will be finalised.

Mr. John MacKay: The only detailed study which the Lenihan review group recommended should be pursued is the further investigation of the problem of microphthalmos in the Forth Valley health board area and elsewhere. Work on this is proceeding, but it is not possible to say when it will be completed.

Agricultural Research Institutes

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the implications for animal welfare of the 16 per cent. cut in research into animal diseases proposed in the agriculture and food research service report, "A Long Term View"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: The Agricultural and Food Research Council's recent paper "A Long Term View" is concerned with management roles and structures and makes no recommendations about levels of research activity.

The council's corporate plan for 1985-1990 proposes a 16 per cent. reduction in research in animal diseases but I would not expect this to affect work on animal welfare which is funded under a separate heading.

Reprocessing Plant (Dounreay)

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many objections have been lodged up to 18 July against the planning application for the proposed European demonstration reprocessing plant at Dounreay (a) by persons or bodies based in Scotland, (b) by persons or bodies in the rest of the United Kingdom and (c) by persons or bodies outwith the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

	Number
(a)	310
(b)	124
(c)	4
Total	438

In addition, there have been 672 representations in support of the proposed development, all from persons or bodies based in Scotland.

MacBrayne Haulage

Mr. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will report on progress on the sale of MacBrayne Haulage.

Mr. George Younger: I have approved a proposal by the Scottish Transport Group to sell MacBrayne Haulage to the owners of Kildonan Transport Ltd., who operate existing road haulage services in north-east Scotland. The sale price is £450,000.

Mr. J. F. Mitchell BDS

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether a decision has yet been reached on the representation made by the Lothian health board to the National Health Service tribunal in respect of Mr. J. F. Mitchell BDS.

Mr. Younger: In relation to the Appeal by Mr. J. F. Mitchell BDS, Whitehouse, Whitehouse Road, Barnton, Edinburgh against a direction of the National Health Service tribunal dated 24 October 1984 following a representation to the tribunal by Lothian health board, I have decided to accept the recommendation of the reporter, Mr. W. D. Prosser QC, dean of the Faculty of Advocates, that the direction should be confirmed without modification. I have therefore confirmed the direction whereby Mr. Mitchell's name shall be removed from the list maintained by Lothian health board of the names of dental practitioners who undertake to provide general dental services under the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 and his name shall be removed from or not included in any corresponding list kept by any other health board under Part II of the 1978 Act.

I am arranging for a copy of the letter which is being sent today from the Scottish Home and Health Department conveying this decision to Mr. Mitchell to be placed in the Library.

In its statement containing the foregoing direction, the NHS tribunal suggested that consideration should be given to the existing procedures under the 1978 Act and the National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunal) (Scotland) Regulations 1974 for dealing with issues of this kind and I shall consider this matter in the light of the tribunal's comments.

Assistance to Newspapers

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much financial assistance the Highlands and Islands development board has provided from public funds in support of newspapers; and if he will list the newspapers and the amounts involved in each case.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 12 July 1985, c. 554]: Since its establishment the board has approved assistance totalling £223,222 grant and £304,950 loan to 10 newspapers published in various parts of the board's area.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Post Office (Postal Business)

Mr. Raffan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will announce financial objectives and performance aims for the postal business of the Post Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: Over the last several months the Post Office has moved to greater separation of the mails and counter businesses operationally, managerially and financially. I have therefore decided that this is the right time to discontinue the setting of postal business targets and to move, from 1985-86, to setting targets separately for each of royal mail and counters. National Girobank is already targeted separately.

The postal business was set the performance aim in February 1982 of reducing its real unit costs by 5 per cent. in the three years to 1984-85 taking 1981-82 as a base, with a provision for a reduction of 2 per cent. in 1982-83. I congratulate the management and work force of the Post Office for having bettered that target.

I have decided that the royal mails business should be set the target of further reducing its real unit costs by 2·2 per cent. in 1985-86 compared with 1984-85 and that the counters business should be targeted for a reduction of 1·5 per cent. compared with 1984-85.

The Government have no doubt that it is vital to the future of both businesses and to the future of jobs in both businesses that the Post Office should strive to make further significant improvements in efficiency in order to retain its existing customers and to attract new work. I believe that these targets are demanding but I am confident that the Post Office is capable of reaching them.

The move to separate targets raises certain problems in attempting to set financial objectives. It will be a little time yet before sufficiently robust figures are available on which separate profit targets for the two businesses could be determined.

I have therefore decided to review the financial objectives for mails and counters and to delay setting medium-term financial objectives until later this year. As an interim measure, therefore, I have decided that each of royal mails and counters businesses should be required to secure a 4·5 per cent. return on turnover, on the current cost accounting convention, before tax but after interest, for the financial year 1985-86.

Argentina

80. Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received following the lifting of import restrictions on the Argentine.

Mr. Channon: None.

Car Exhaust Emissions

81. Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to conclude negotiations with the European Economic Community over car exhaust emissions.

Mr. Channon: The proposed directive on car exhaust emissions will be discussed in the next Environment Council, scheduled for November. I hope that the important outstanding technical points will by then have been satisfactorily resolved.

Tourist Grants

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much per head in tourism grants was paid out in the last five years (a) throughout England and (b) in each of the English Tourist Board regions.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been expended in tourist grants in each of the five years, broken down by region and county.

Mr. Trippier: Details of grants made by the English tourist board under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 are not held on a county basis and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Payments of grant to projects in the regions covered by the non-statutory regional tourist boards are as follows:

* All figures are drawn from the English Tourist Board's Annual Reports for the years 1980-81 to 1984-85 rounded to the nearest £1,000. The sum of component figures may not add to the totals due to rounding.

† All parts of these areas become eligible for Section 4 assistance only on 1 August 1982 when the scheme was extended to non-Assisted Areas.

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what major projects in the last five years received tourism grants in (a) the east of England and (b) Suffolk;

(2) what tourism grants in connection with the heritage coast in Suffolk have been given in the last five years.

Mr. Trippier: For reasons of commercial confidentiality details of individual grant offers made by the English tourist board are not published without the consent of the applicants. From 1980-81 to date 43 grants totalling approximately £2 million have been offered to projects with capital costs of more than £100,000 in the areas covered the East Anglia and East Midlands tourist boards. Of these, five offers worth £312,000 in total were to projects in Suffolk. In the period three projects (whose capital costs were all less than £100,000) on the Suffolk heritage coast received offers of grant totalling £22,440. East Anglia and most of the East Midlands region were excluded from the scheme under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969 until August 1982.

Tourism (Bed-nights)

Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the latest figures on the number of bed-nights for visitors by tourist region and by county.

Mr. Trippier: The latest information on nights spent away from home by British tourists by region is on page 12 of British Home Tourist Survey 1983 published by the British tourist authority, a copy of which is in the Library. More detailed information is not available. Information on nights spent by overseas visitors by region and county is on pages 8 to 10 of the report "The regional spread of overseas visitors to the UK 1983 International Passenger Survey" produced by the British tourist authority, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Manufactures (Germany)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the United Kingdom deficit on trade in manufactures with Germany since September 1981 at an annual rate, and how this compares with 1970.

Mr. Channon: The crude deficit in manufactures with Germany in the period September 1984 to May 1985 at an annual rate was £5·5 billion. This compares with £0·1 billion in the year 1970. Annualised figures may be unreliable as a guide to the outcome of a 12-month period.

Teletext Services

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken to encourage British industry to make use of the enabling legislation in the Cable and Broadcasting Act to market British-developed enhanced teletext services overseas.

Mr. Butcher: We have ensured that United Kingdom broadcasters have a technical specification to support subscription user group services in this country and in overseas countries using United Kingdom teletext technology; but its application in other countries depends on broadcasters and regulatory bodies in those countries.

Departmental Committees of Inquiry

Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 7 May, Official Report, column 314, if he will now take steps to provide the information on departmental committees of inquiry established from 1974 to 1979.

Vosper Shiprepairers

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress is being made over the sale of Vosper Shiprepairers by British Shipbuilders; and when he expects the negotiations to be completed.

Mr. Butcher: British Shipbuilders is continuing to discuss the sale of Vosper Shiprepairers with potential purchasers. I cannot forecast when the negotiations will be completed.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress is being made over the sale of Vosper Shipbuilders by British Shipbuilders; and when he expects the negotiations to be completed.

Mr. Butcher: Sales documents for Vosper Thornycroft (UK) Ltd. were issued on 14 June. Initial bids have been requested by 16 August. I cannot at this stage say when negotiations for the sale are likely to be completed.

Large Multiples (Discounts)

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the Office of Fair Trading conclusion that discounts available to the larger multiples are helpful; and what assessment he makes of the impact of these arrangements on competitive influence from these markets.

Mr. Fletcher: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the member for Nottingham, South (Mr. Brandon-Bravo) on 28 June at column 510.

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the value of discounts enjoyed by the larger grocery multiples; and how this compares with the position five years ago.

Mr. Fletcher: This issue is discussed in chapter 4 of the Director General's report. Table 27 provides statistical information on the value of special terms negotiated by manufacturers with customers of different size and compares these statistics with corresponding figures in the MMC report published in 1981. In addition, customers will receive discounts related to cost savings on the part of manufacturers.

Small Retail Grocers

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he will take to seek to ensure that small retail grocers survive in sufficient numbers to maintain competition and to serve the needs of local customers.

Mr. Fletcher: The Director General's report concludes that, despite some increase in concentration, competition in grocery retailing remains very strong. While small independent grocers are at a price disadvantage compared with the large multiples, they have the potential for competitive advantage in other ways, such as increased specialisation, greater flexibility and scope for more personalised service. The Government do not consider that intervention to prevent or mitigate the changes resulting from competitive forces would be justified.

Grocery Trade (Large Multiples)

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the share of the grocery trade now commanded by the large multiples; and how this compares with the position 10 years ago.

Mr. Fletcher: Table 10 of the Director General's report gives figures, by region, of the market shares of the multiples for packaged groceries for the years 1980 and 1984; and these are discussed in paragraphs 2.11 to 2.18 of the report. Figures for the years 1974-1980 are contained in Table 11 of Appendix 1 to the MMC report on discounts to retailers. Comparisons between the two sets of figures need to take into account the fact that the MMC figures cover groceries sold through grocers, while the OFT figures cover in addition sales through non-grocery outlets.

Current Cost Returns

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how current cost returns compare in industry generally, and in food manufacture in particular in the case of the largest food retailing companies.

Mr. Fletcher: The relevant figures are set out in tables 14 and 15 of the Director General's report.

Rotherham

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further action he proposes to take to stimulate industrial growth and development in the metropolitan borough of Rotherham.

Mr. Trippier: The metropolitan borough of Rotherham is mostly situated in a development area and thus already enjoys the highest level of regional incentives as well as having access to the national schemes of support outlined in the booklet "Support for Business", a copy of which is available in the Library. I have no plans to modify these arrangements.

Imports and Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the terms of trade and relative volume of imports and exports in May 1985 on (a) 1975 base and (b) 1970 base.

Mr. Channon: This information is not available.

North-West (Tourism)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list in the Official Report the major projects that have received tourism grants in the north-west in the last five years.

Mr. Trippier: For reasons of commercial confidentiality details of individual grant offers made by the English tourist board under section 4 of the Development of Tourist Act 1969 are not published without consent of the applicants. From 1980-81 to date 55 grants totalling approximately £2·75 million have been offered to projects with capital costs of more than £100,000 in the area covered by the North-West tourist board.

Ford Motor Company

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals his Department has received from Ford to increase the United Kingdom manufactured percentage of its share of the United Kingdom car market.

Mr. Butcher: Ford has recently reconfirmed its commitment to raise the British-built share of its car sales here but much depends on the company's success in improving the performance of its car plants in Britain.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has reached his conclusions on the Export Credits Guarantee Department management review.

Mr. Channon: Yes. I welcome the proposals in the management review for internal reorganisation and radical changes in ECGD's methods of operation which will now be put into effect. These will lead to improved efficiency and a better service for exporters. I also agree with the review's conclusion that ECGD needs an injection of commercial experience from the private sector. I am not, however, convinced that the proposed board represents the best way of achieving this. I intend to strengthen the top management during the implementation period by the filling of a fifth Under-Secretary post, bringing the Department back to its previous level, and to fill, over a period of time, three Under-Secretary posts at ECGD by secondments from the private sector.

Information Technology (Skills Shortages)

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the committee examining the problem of skills shortages in the information technology industry will issue its final report.

Mr. Butcher: The third and final report of the Information Technology Skills Shortages Committee, which I have been chairing, will be published on Thursday 25 July, and I shall place a copy in the Library of the House. The report will sum up initiatives taken following the committee's previous reports, and will make recommendations for future action. Its publication will complete the committee's work and the report will incorporate a further set of ideas which can be followed up by the newly formed IT skills agency which has been set up by the CBI Education Foundation.

Co-operatives

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will detail the provision being made for providing help and advice for co-operatives and for people wishing to set up co-operatives in 1986-87; and what provision is being made for the future funding of co-operative development agencies in the Greater London area presently funded by the Greater London Council.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: The national Co-operative Development Agency, which is funded by my Department, will continue to provide help and advice to co-operatives and people wishing to set up co-operatives in 1986-87. In addition, co-operatives will be entitled to whatever DTI assistance is available to business generally since no distinction is made in schemes of assistance between co-operatives and other small businesses.

We have no plans to fund local co-operative development agencies in the Greater London area or elsewhere.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Hennessy Report

Mr. Ashby asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the implementation of the recommendations of the Hennessy report.

Mr. Hurd: Since my predecessor reported to the House last July on the progress made in implementing the Hennessy recommendations a further 20 recommendations have been implemented.

These include the strengthening of the security of the communications room in each H block, the relocation of a number of alarm buttons, the revision of the prison segment system whereby the prison can in an emergency be quickly and efficiently divided into smaller more easily manageable units, the reorganisation of the prison security department, and the strengthening of the management structure both of the prison and of the headquarters department.

Following consultation with representatives of the legal profession and others I have decided not to introduce closed visits for professional visitors. I am confident that improved procedures for searching prisoners and their visitors make the implementation of this particular recommendation unnecessary.

Sixty-four of the 73 recommendations have thus been dealt with. Of the remainder a number include major construction or installation work which will inevitably take some time to complete. I believe that the security of Her Majesty's prison, Maze, has been substantially improved. Work to complete the implementation of the outstanding recommendations will continue.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the manpower strength of the Royal Ulster Constabulary in Northern Ireland on 30 June, giving details of the number of operatives in each year for the following categories: Royal Ulster Constabulary full-time, Royal Ulster Constabulary full-time reserve and, Royal Ulster Constabulary part-time reserve.

Mr. Scott: The combined strength of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and its full and part-time reserves on 30 June 1985 was 12,661: 8,205 were members of the regular force, 2,643 full-time reserve officers and 1,813 part-time reserve officers.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 8 February at column 713 for the figures at the end of each year between 1969 and 1984.

Fair Employment Agency (Discrimination Cases)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of individual discrimination have been found by the Fair Employment Agency in 1985; and how many of these were against (a) Roman Catholics and (b) Protestants.

Dr. Boyson: Four up to 30 June. One against a Roman Catholic and three against Protestants.

Plastic Bullets

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many plastic bullets have been fired in Northern Ireland since the beginning of the current year and in what circumstances; in what location the bullets were fired; and how many, if any, persons were injured as a result of the use of plastic bullets.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Prison Population

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the size of the present prison population in Northern Ireland divided into terrorist type offenders and other offenders categorised by age and by sex in the following groups; under 18 years old, 18 to 25 years, 25 years to 30 years, 30 years to 40 years, 40 years to 50 years, 50 years to 60 years and over 60 years giving a breakdown of the length of sentence being served by percentage of the total prison population.

Mr. Scott: The latest date for which the information requested is available is 16 June 1985. On that date the total prison population—including unconvicted inmates and persons detained under sentence in young offenders' centres and under section 73 of the Children and Young Persons Act (Northern Ireland) 1968—was 2,138. The details requested in respect of sentenced inmates are set out in the following table.

4. Person detained at Secretary of State's pleasure are included with life sentence figures.

Security Statistics

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the security statistics for the first six months of 1985 are now available together with details of persons charged with terrorist-type offences and convictions for scheduled offences for the year.

Mr. Hurd: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the number of arrests so far in the current year concerning the operation of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 (a) what was the yearly total of arrests made under the Act, (b) how many persons arrested under the Act were detained for the following periods (i) up to 12 hours, (ii) 12 to 24 hours, (iii) 24 to 36 hours, (iv) 36 to 48 hours, (v) 48 to 60 hours and (vi) 60 to 72 hours, indicating those numbers (1) not ultimately charged under the Act and released, (2) those charged under the Act and, (3) those charged with an offence but not under the Acts indicating which offences and (4) those charged under the Act but not initially detained under the Act;

(2) if he will state the current number of people who were detained so far in the current year under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 and charged with scheduled offences under the Act and other Acts, separately; and with which offences they have been charged.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Plastic Bullets

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many formal complaints have been made about incidents of police use of plastic baton rounds so far in 1985; in how many cases the complaints have been upheld; and in how many cases disciplinary action has been taken against the officers involved.

Mr. Scott: One. This complaint is still under investigation.

Orange Demonstrations

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many arrests were made for disorderly or riotous behaviour at the venue of each Orange demonstration on (a) 12 July 1984 and (b) 12 July 1985 during the period from the start of the procession to the departure of those taking part from the point where the procession terminated; and in each case how many of those arrested were taking part in the demonstration.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of the police operation to stop the parade through the Gortalowry estate in Cookstown on 28 June.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of policing the Orange procession through the Gortalowry estate in Cookstown on 12 July; what was the cost in 1984, and how many incidents there were which required police action on either occasion.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible

Civil Servants (Removal Expenses)

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in each of the last three years, how many persons have received from the Department of Health and Social Services payments to assist them in their removal expenses to Northern Ireland from (a) the rest of the United Kingdom and (b) the Irish Republic; and if he will give, if currently available, the largest sum, the smallest sum and the average sum paid for such a purpose in each year.

Mr. Chris Patten: I regret that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Travelling People (Newry Town)

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many houses in the Newry town area have had the tenancy awarded to travelling people; and if he will list the estates concerned and the number of tenancies in each estate.

Mr. Chris Patten: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, however I understand from the chairman that nine houses have been allocated as follows:

Number of tenancies awarded

Estate	Number
Fathom Park	2
Loanda Crescent	2
Parkhead Crescent	3
Mourneview Park	2

Mivan Construction Company, Crumlin

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much grant and subsidy has been paid from public funds to the Mivan Construction Company of Crumlin, County Antrim and its subsidiaries in each of the past three years; and what is the anticipated amount of such grant and subsidy in the current financial year.

Mr. Boyson: Grants paid in the past three years totalled £15,023:

1983-84	7,964
1984-85	6,511

It is estimated that in the current financial year £28,054 will be paid.

No known subsidiaries have received any assistance.

Potatoes

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the average retail price of potatoes in Northern Ireland in each of the last six weeks.

Dr. Boyson: The Department of Agriculture does not collect information which would enable the average weekly retail price of potatoes to be calculated.

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the tonnage of potatoes imported into Northern Ireland for each of the last six weeks.

Dr. Boyson: The information for the three weeks ending 29 June is as follows:

Week ending	Tonnes
15 June 1985	2,005
22 June 1985	1,607
29 June 1985	2,539

These imports came in the main from Cyprus and Holland; some were re-exported to the Republic of Ireland.

Full information is not yet available for the first three weeks of July; however, there were no imports from Cyprus or Holland in that period.

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the average price received by farmers in Northern Ireland in each of the last six weeks for potatoes.

Dr. Boyson: Average growers prices for home grown potatoes were as follows:

Week ending	£ per tonne
15 June 1985	20·14
22 June 1985	24·06
29 June 1985	No returns
6 July 1985	40·33
13 July 1985	35·53
20 July 1985	32·02

Prices up to the end of June relate to potatoes from the 1984 crop thereafter prices relate to the 1985 crop.

Grain Prices

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the average price of (i) whole barley, (ii) whole wheat and (iii) maize to Northern Ireland farmers.

Dr. Boyson: During 1984, the average retail prices were as follows:

	£ per tonne
(i) Whole barley	145·44
(ii) Whole wheat	147·67

Processions

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list the processions that took place in Northern Ireland between 1 March 1985 and 30 April 1985 in respect of which the prescribed notice was not received by the police; if he will indicate in each case whether (a) masked men or (b) armed men were observed by the police or of whose presence the police have photographic evidence; and if he will state in each case how many persons have been charged in connection with such a procession;

(2) if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary as to those processions involving bands in connection with the local government elections in May which took place in the local government districts of Londonderry, Limavady, Coleraine, Magherafelt, Cookstown and Strabane and which necessitated a police presence and as to the total cost of policing each procession; and whether the prescribed notice was received by the police in each case;

(3) what representations he has received and from what sources requesting a ban on the Apprentice Boys' 12 August demonstration in Londonderry city; whether, in deciding whether to impose a ban on demonstrations of this type, he seeks the advice of the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary regarding the practicality of re-routing the procession; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Fertilisers

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the tonnage of fertilisers for agricultural use imported into Northern Ireland in each of the last five years.

Dr. Boyson: It is not possible to provide this information.

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the tonnage of fertilisers manufactured in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years.

Dr. Boyson: It is not possible to provide this information.

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the average price of fertilisers for agricultural use in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years.

Dr. Boyson: The information is as follows:

	£ per tonne
1980	112·39
1981	116·94
1982	118·77
1983	121·69
1984	128·43

Grain Imports

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the tonnage of grain imported into Northern Ireland in each of the last three years.

Dr. Boyson: It is not possible to provide this information. Estimates of net imports of grain are given in the annual statistical review of Northern Ireland Agriculture.

Animal Feedstuffs

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated difference in the price of animal feedstuffs between Northern Ireland and other regions of the United Kingdom.

Dr. Boyson: £6·48 more per tonne in 1984 in Northern Ireland than in Great Britain. (Information is not available on the price difference between Northern Ireland and other separate regions of the United Kingdom).

District Heating

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will instruct the Housing Executive to investigate ways of providing tenants who do not wish, or cannot afford, to use the district heating system, with an electric immersion heater.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 15 July 1985, c. 45]: I understand from the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive that the introduction of electric immersion heaters into a metered hot-water system would create practical difficulties. Moreover the voluntary disconnection of tenants from district heating systems on a wide scale would threaten the viability of the remaining schemes. The Housing Executive is however currently undertaking a programme of consultation with its tenants on the basis that its preferred option is the removal of district heating systems and their replacement with individual heating systems which may include electric immersion heaters.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

USSR (Human Rights)

14. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any new commitments relating to the implementation of the human rights provisions of the Helsinki final act were given by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics at the recent conference on security and co-operation in Europe, in Ottawa.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The meeting was unable to agree any conclusions or recommendations. Accordingly the Soviet Union gave no new human rights commitments. Its attitude at Ottawa gave no reason for hope that its policies were about to change for the better.

Stockholm Talks

15. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress at the Stockholm talks on confidence building measures.

Mr. Luce: In the sixth session, which ended on 5 July, we and our allies made every effort to persuade all participants to focus on the important measures proposed by the Western Alliance. These measures are designed to enhance confidence and build trust between all sides.

BBC External Services

16. Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and other eastern European countries about the jamming of the British Broadcasting Corporation external services.

57. Mr. Bendall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Soviet authorities concerning the jamming of British Broadcasting Corporation external services programmes to the Soviet Union and eastern bloc countries, against the principles of the Helsinki final act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We continue to take suitable opportunities to remind the Soviet Union of its commitments under the various international agreements which cover this issue, and my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind) intends to raise this matter again with the Soviet authorities during his current visit to the USSR. No other east European country is currently jamming BBC services.

27. Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will increase the funds available to the British Broadcasting Corporation external services to enable it to meet not only its current commitments but also to compete more favourably with other international broadcasting stations.

Mr. Renton: There has been a real increase of over 30 per cent. in the total grants-in-aid to the British Broadcasting Corporation external services since 1979. During this period broadcasting levels have risen from 711½ to 727½ hours per week and considerable improvements are being made to British Broadcasting Corporation audibility overseas under the £100 million programme agreed in 1981. Although in terms of broadcasting hours the British Broadcasting Corporation rank only fifth, the quality of British broadcasting output has won them an estimated 120 million listeners worldwide making the British Broadcasting Corporation the most popular overseas broadcasting service.

65. Mr. Greville Janner asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make compensation available to the British Broadcasting Corporation external services for losses incurred due to sterling imbalances earlier in the year.

Mr. Renton: Overseas expenditure of the BBC external services represented only about 6 per cent. of their total grants-in-aid in 1984-85. The effect of exchange rate movements on the total expenditure of the external services, which can result in gains as well as losses, is therefore relatively small. But this issue will remain under discussion.

Afghanistan

17. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with Afghanistan.

Mr. Renton: We have no substantive dealings with the Karmal regime, which depends on an occupying army of over 115,000 Soviet Troops. We and our Community partners have repeatly condemned that occupation, which has brought untold suffering. Since 1980 we have given over £25 million in humanitarian aid for the 4 million Afghan refugees who have fled abroad.

72. Mr. Richard Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent steps his Department has taken to publicise and protest against the continuing abuses of human rights in Afghanistan.

Mr. Renton: We take every opportunity to make clear our grave concern over the gross violations of human rights in Afghanistan, a situation clearly documented by the United Nations Special Rapporteur. That situation continues to deteriorate, with the evident Soviet determination to deploy massive forces without thought for the suffering of the local population.

Ottawa Conference (Human Rights)

19. Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Kingdom delegation to the conference on co-operation and security in Europe in Ottawa raised the issue of the freedom of individuals to practise their chosen profession without being subjected to religious or racial discrimination.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: This was indeed one of the points that was strongly pressed by the United Kingdom delegation with particular reference to the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe.

36. Mr. Woodall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the proceedings and recent human rights conference at Ottawa indicating the progress made in the implementation of the human rights provisions of the Helsinki final act in the Union of Soviet Social Republics.

Mr. Luce: The Meeting took place from 7 May to 17 June. We regret that it was unable to fulfil its mandate to produce conclusions and recommendations. However, United Kingdom representatives were able to make clear to the Soviet Union and other eastern European countries our concerns about their implementation of the Helsinki and Madrid human rights provisions.

Contadora Initiative

20. Mr. George asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussion he has held with the Government of Mexico concerning the Contadora initiative.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend discussed the Contadora initiative with the Mexican Foreign Minister on 11 June in London on the occasion of the state visit of the President of Mexico.

Soviet SS20 Missiles

21. Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the consequences for arms control of recent new deployments of Soviet SS20 missiles.

43. Mr. Patrick Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of recent increases in the deployment of Soviet SS20 missiles.

Mr. Luce: The new figure of 423 SS20 missiles shows continued deployment by the Russians in spite of the moratorium announced by Mr. Gorbachev in April, when the SS20 figure was 414. The deployment highlights the need for the Soviet Union to negotiate seriously to reach a balanced agreement at Geneva. The North Atlantic Treaty Organisation maintains its decision to halt, reverse or modify its intermediate nuclear force deployments in accordance with the terms of a negotiated agreement.

Sudan

22. Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's current relations with the Sudan.

Mr. Luce: Our relations with Sudan are close and based on a long tradition of friendship. Her Majesty's ambassador in Khartoum enjoys good access to the Sudanese authorities and maintains a regular dialogue with them. We warmly support the efforts of the Sudanese Government to return Sudan to prosperity and democracy, and are making a major contribution to the relief of Sudan's drought and refugee problems.

Botswana

23. Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken to express to the South African Government the Government's view of the recent incursion of South African troops into Botswana.

Mr. Renton: We have repeatedly made clear to the South African Government our serious view of this indefensible attack. We have also joined separately with the Ten, the Commonwealth and the Security Council in strong public condemnation of it.

Central America

24. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the promotion of human rights in Central America.

Mr. Renton: We support all efforts to bring about an improvement in the human rights situation in the region. Central American Governments are well aware of our concern over human rights abuses.

76. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with representatives of the Organisation of American States regarding the situation in Central America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: None.

International Airports (Sanctions)

25. Mr. Cunliffe asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, when considering imposing sanctions against Beirut international airport, Her Majesty's Government will at the same time consider imposing such sanctions against Syria, Iran and Libya.

Mr. Luce: We are considering, with other countries, how best to ensure that Beirut airport is not again used as a safe haven by hijackers. Should security standards at other airports fall below adequate levels, we shall be ready to take appropriate action with the rest of the international community.

29. Mr. Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to discuss with his European Economic Community partners concrete measures against terrorism, including state sponsored terrorism; and if he will seek their agreement to take joint action in respect of Beirut airport.

Mr. Renton: The Ten member countries of the European Community adopted a set of measures on terrorism and abuse of diplomatic immunity last year. The United Kingdom proposed the drawing up of these measures with the aim of combatting state sponsored terrorism. We circulated proposals at the Milan Council to counter terrorism against aircraft. These include suggestions for joint action by the Ten regarding Beirut International Airport.

USSR (Strategic Defence)

26. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics' research into strategic defence is being taken into consideration in current disarmament negotiations.

Mr. Luce: Yes Soviet space and Ballistic Missile defence programmes are being fully taken into account at the negotiations in Geneva on nuclear and space arms. As my right hon. Friend, the Minister of State for the Armed Forces (Mr. J. Stanley) told my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 11 July, Soviet activities in this field are extensive and long established.

European Community (Structure)

28. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with European Community Foreign Ministers concerning the preparations for the forthcoming intergovernmental conference on the future structure of the Community.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I discussed the issues raised by the intergovernmental conference at separate meetings on 21 July with the Foreign Ministers of the Federal Republic of Germany and Luxembourg and with other European Community Foreign Ministers in the Foreign Affairs Council on 22 July.

European Community (Council of Ministers)

30. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet his European Economic Community counterparts in the Council of Ministers to discuss the consequences of the discussions held at the recent Milan summit meeting of the European Council.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Follow-up to the Milan European Council was discussed at the Foreign Affairs Council on 22 and 23 July, which I attended.

49. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on further progress towards majority voting in the Council of Ministers.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: It is generally accepted that if decisions are not to be unduly delayed in the enlarged Community greater use will need to be made of the voting provisions of the European Community treaty. This will be one of the issues to be discussed at the proposed inter-governmental conference.

Famine

31. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has proposed any new initiatives in the United Nations to seek to prevent further outbreaks of mass famine in the Third world.

Mr. Renton: We have urged the Food and Agricultural Organisation (FAO) to increase its programme of aid to rehabilitate agriculture in Africa, and called on the Agency to sponsor more research into drought-resistant traditional crops, for example sorghum and millet, and into making them more acceptable to consumers. We have taken the initiative in supporting actions within the United Nations system to improve the international response to the long-term problems of food shortages, in particular those relating to up-grading the monitoring activities of FAO and to enhancing co-ordination between agencies.

Strategic Defence Initiative

32. Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the Government's response to the strategic defence initiative.

Mr. Luce: My right hon. and learned Friend has received representations from many quarters. Most of these have been in support of the Government's policy towards the Strategic Defence Initiative, which remains as set out in the four points agreed by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and President Reagan at Camp David in December 1984.

Vice-President George Bush

33. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's recent discussions with Vice-President George Bush.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Vice-President Bush visited London from 2 to 3 July. His purpose was to discuss follow-up to the Bonn Economic Summit and the Lisbon meeting of NATO Foreign Ministers, as well as action to combat international terrorism. His meeting with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, which I attended, concentrated on the terrorism issue and led to the joint communique which was issued after the meeting.

Belize

34. Mr. Mark Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Belizean relations in the light of the forthcoming visit of the Prime Minister of Belize.

Mr. Renton: We are delighted that Mr. Esquivel felt able to accept my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's invitation to visit the United Kingdom. His visit will provide an opportunity to further the already close and warm relations which have traditionally existed between our two countries.

Terrorism

35. Mr. McWilliam asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in the light of the hijacking of the Trans World Airlines airliner, Her Majesty's Government will ask the Soviet Union to co-operate in combating terrorism.

Mr. Renton: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said in her answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Terlezki) on 22 July, we believe the Soviet Union has a role to play in combating international terrorism and we will take every suitable opportunity to join with others in the common fight against terrorism.

Nicaragua

38. Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador in Nicaragua of the damage done to the economy by the attacks of the Contra force.

Mr. Renton: Reports from Her Majesty's ambassadors in Central America confirm that the problems of the region can only be solved by a comprehensive negotiated settlement of regional tensions.

Mozambique

40. Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the prospects for stability in Mozambique.

Mr. Renton: Despite the Nkomati Accord the Mozambique Government is still faced by serious security problems. The prospects of stability depend on a number of factors, including the degree of cooperation afforded by the international community. The assistance given by us and other Western Governments should hasten the restoration of peace in Mozambique to the benefit of the people of that country, its Commonwealth neighbours and the region as a whole.

Non-proliferation Treaty Review Conference

41. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will report progress on Her Majesty's Government's preparations for the forthcoming non-proliferation treaty review conference.

Mr. Luce: We are working constructively for a positive outcome to the review conference. Our preparations have included full and active participation in the three sessions of the preparatory committee, and close and continuing consultation with the Governments of other depositary states, the United States and the USSR. We are also actively lobbying non-parties to the treaty in search of increased membership to strengthen it further. In the last year nine states have adhered.

As I said in my speech to the House during the adjournment debate on 6 June, at columns 545-48, we think that, if the review conference is to strengthen this vital arms control agreement, it must conduct its review in a balanced and sensible manner. We ourselves will shortly be providing to other parties to the treaty a United Kingdom report about the implementation of the treaty to date.

Cyprus

42. Mr. Norman Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek the assistance of the United States Government to persuade Turkey to conclude an agreement setting up the Federal Republic of Cyprus.

Mr. Renton: We remain in close touch with the United States Government, which shares our concern about the situation in Cyprus. Like us, they actively support the United Nations Secretary-General's current initiative.

Brazil

44. Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Brazil.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I paid an official visit to Brazil from 8 to 10 July. I had two sessions of talks with the Foreign Minister Dr. Setubal covering bilateral relations, including the opportunities for increasing trade, international questions and Brazil's economic position. I also called on President Sarney, the Finance Minister and the President of Central Bank and paid short visits to Rio de Janeiro and Sao Paolo. I met groups of businessmen in both cities, and addressed the British Chamber of Commerce in Sao Paolo. Relations between the United Kingdom and Brazil are excellent: I found everywhere on my visit a wish to develop them still further.

Falkland Islands

45. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to pay an official visit to the Falkland Islands.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have no present plans to do so.

Costa Rica (United States Advisers)

46. Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any recent discussions with the United States Government within the framework of the Contadora initiative concerning its supply of military advisers to Costa Rica; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No. Neither the United Kingdom nor the United States is a direct participant in the Contadora process.

Lebanon

47. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with the Lebanon.

Mr. Luce: We support the restoration of the authority and sovereignty of the Lebanese Government and commend all efforts to improve security and national reconciliation. We have regular contacts with leading members of the Government and of the different communities.

77. Mr. Robert C. Brown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest situation in Lebanon.

Mr. Luce: We deplore the continuing violence in Lebanon. A lasting improvement in security requires the cooperation and agreement of all the Lebanese communities.

Soviet Foreign Minister

48. Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether an invitation to visit London has been extended to the new Soviet Foreign Minister.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Yes.

52. Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will meet the new Foreign Minister of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

62. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet the new Foreign Minister of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I expect to meet Mr. Shevardnadze in Helsinki on 1 August.

European Community (Intergovernmental Conference)

50. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the intergovernmental conference arising from the majority vote at Milan.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The intergovernmental conference will have its first meeting in Luxembourg on 9 September. It will take place at Foreign Minister level.

79. Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Minister from his Department will attend the EEC intergovernmental conference on amendments to the treaty of Rome.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I plan to do so.

Argentina

51. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about relations with Argentina.

60. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the prospects for Anglo-Argentine relations in the light of Her Majesty's Government's decision to re-open trade with Argentina.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Sir J. Biggs-Davison).

56. Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now seek to renew diplomatic relations with Argentina.

71. Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now seek to renew diplomatic relations with Argentina.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We have taken a number of initiatives with the objective of restoring more normal relations with Argentina. Argentina has so far failed to respond constructively. We believe that practical measures of benefit to both sides offer the best way of improving relations.

63. Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made as to when normal trading and diplomatic relations will be restored between the United Kingdom and the Argentine.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Epping Forest (Sir J. Biggs-Davison) and to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Penhaligon).

Lebanon (Terrorist Activity)

53. Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of Syria about terrorist activities in the Lebanon.

Mr. Luce: The Syrian Government is fully aware of our views about acts of terrorism wherever committed. We continue to urge all those who have influence in Lebanon to do everything possible to combat terrorist activities there.

Spain (Extradition Treaty)

54. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has yet concluded an extradition treaty with Spain.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department on 22 July 1985.

Foreign Compensation (Czechoslovakia) Order

55. Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many individuals have been granted awards under the Foreign Compensation (Czechoslovakia) Order 1982.

Mr. Renton: There were 2,204 claims received by the Foreign Compensation Commission under the Foreign Compensation (Czechoslovakia) Order 1982. The commission has so far reviewed 443 of these claims and granted awards in 133 cases.

Chile

58. Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions during the last year Her Majesty's Government have raised at the United Nations the subject of human rights in Chile; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Chile's human rights record is a regular item on the agenda of a number of United Nations bodies including the General Assembly, the Commission on human Rights and the Economic and Social Council. We participate fully in such discussions.

European Union (Treaty)

59. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a White Paper setting out the implications for the United Kingdom of the proposals to establish a treaty on European union which are now to be considered by a special meeting of the Council of Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The intergovernmental conference has been called "for the purpose of determining by common accord the amendments to be made to the European Economic Community treaty". We shall consider proposals for change carefully. Our attitude will depend on whether they help achieve the practical changes necessary to improve the way the Community works. I have no plans to publish a White Paper.

President Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev (Meeting)

61. Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the likely results of the planned meeting in Geneva between President Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev.

66. Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the prospects for East-West relations in the light of the forthcoming meeting between President Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: We welcome the prospect of a meeting between President Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev. Contact at the highest level can make a valuable contribution to the process of creating better understanding and greater confidence between East and West, and to generating a better political atmosphere for arms control negotiations, in Geneva and elsewhere.

Test Ban Treaty

64. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the latest proposals for progress on a comprehensive test ban treaty before the third review conference of the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Luce: Our position on a comprehensive test ban was explained in my speech in the adjournment debate on 7 June at columns 619-23. We firmly believe that progress on negotiation of such a treaty cannot be made until key technical problems, including those of verification and compliance, are resolved. We believe these should be discussed by the Geneva Conference on Disarmament, where we tabled on 12 July a new paper on seismic monitoring of a comprehensive test ban.

Arms Control

67. Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has held with representatives of the European members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation about the current prospects for arms control.

Mr. Luce: My right hon. and learned Friend discusses the prospects for arms control regularly with colleagues in other European allied countries, both bilaterally and in the wider fora provided by the North Atlantic Council, the Western European Union and European Political Cooperation. The last Ministerial meeting of the North Atlantic Council, on 6 and 7 June, provided the occasion for a particularly thorough exchange of views with both his European and North American colleagues.

Cypriot Refugees

68. Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed with the Secretary General of the United Nations the problem of Cypriot refugees.

Mr. Renton: We remain in close and frequent contact with the United Nations Secretary-General over the Cyprus problem. A settlement of it would necessarily deal with the difficult and distressing problem of refugees.

Indonesia

69. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to seek to pay an official visit to Indonesia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to do so. As I told the hon. Member on the 17 April (columns 204-5) and 26 June (column 418) the United Kingdom enjoys good relations with Indonesia. These were strengthened by the visit to Indonesia in April 1985 by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and the visit to London this month by two Indonesian Ministers, General Surono and Dr. Habibie.

Persian Gulf (Attacks on Ships)

70. Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps are currently being taken by Her Majesty's Government in the United Nations to seek to ensure that Iran and Iraq cease their attacks on ships in the Persian Gulf.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he is having with the United Nations and in the international community about attacks by Iraq and Iran on shipping in the Persian Gulf.

Mr. Luce: We remain in close contact with interested parties, both at the United Nations in New York and elsewhere, concerning all aspects of the tragic and wasteful conflict between Iran and Iraq, including attacks on shipping in the gulf. We deplore such attacks and fully supported Security Council Resolution 552 which stressed the importance of freedom of navigation in international waters.

Nicaragua and Chile

73. Dame Judith Hart asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussion he has had with the United States Secretary of State concerning policy towards Nicaragua and Chile.

Mr. Renton: We remain in close touch with the US Administration at all levels over issues of common concern. The US Government is well aware of our views on Nicaragua and Chile.

Nicaragua

74. Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussion he has had with the United States Government within the framework of the Contadora initiative about a resolution of the conflict in Nicaragua.

Mr. Renton: The Contadora Group, comprising Colombia, Mexico, Panama and Venezuela, is attempting to negotiate a comprehensive settlement of regional problems with the five Central American states of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua. No other states participate in their discussions.

Zimbabwe

75. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have made representations to the Government of Zimbabwe about the statement by the Prime Minister that the country intends to break the terms of the Lancaster House Agreement; if Her Majesty's Government have received any representations thereon; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No. I think my hon. Friend's interpretation of Mr. Mugabe's reported remarks goes too far. We naturally have a close interest in Zimbabwe's development, and this is fully reflected in our contacts with the authorities there, but it was clearly understood at the Lancaster House conference that the operation of the Zimbabwean constitution would be a matter for the Zimbabwean Government and courts. That constitution established Zimbabwe as an independent country and gave us no right to interfere in its internal affairs.

COMECON (Mutual Co-operation)

78. Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consideration has been given by the Council of Ministers of the European Economic Community to the communication received from COMECON concerning mutual co-operation.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Milan European Council on 28-29 June held an exchange of views on the recent letter from the council for Mutual Economic Assistance to the Commission, which proposed the resumption of mutual relations. The European Council noted that an exploratory mandate had been given to the Commission, and considered that the results of these contacts should now be awaited.

Middle East.

18. Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the progress in implementing proposals for peace in the middle east made separately by King Hussein and Prime Minister Peres.

37. Mr. Walters asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in securing agreement on King Hussein's middle east peace initiative

39. Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions his Department has had with representatives of the Arab states bordering on Israel about the prospects for peace in the region.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend gave earlier to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short).

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent developments there have been towards peace in the middle east.

Mr. Luce: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister had a useful discussion on 19 July with King Hussein of Jordan about his courageous initiative to move towards negotiations for a peaceful settlement of the Arab/Israel dispute. In Lebanon tension continues in the Southern border area, but a new security plan is being implemented with the participation of Syrian observers in West Beirut. There have been no recent moves towards a solution of the tragic and wasteful conflict in the Gulf, but we support the continuing efforts of the United Nations Secretary General to reach a settlement.

Arms Control

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new initiatives the Government have planned in arms control and disarmament.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 27 June at column 439. We will continue to work with our allies to further the objectives of balanced, verifiable arms control and disarmament.

Salvadorean Military Personnel (Training)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many letters and representations Her Majesty's Government have received on the subject of training in Britain for Salvadorean military officers.

Mr. Renton: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has received about 700 letters and representations on this subject.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how Her Majesty's Government propose to find out whether Salvadorean military personnel sent for training in Britain have been involved in human rights violations.

Mr. Renton: I have nothing to add to the answer given on 28 March by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Defence Procurement (Mr. Lee) to the hon. Member for Warley, East (Mr. Faulds).

British Council

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received the British Council's annual report for 1984-85; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Yes. My right hon. and learned Friend's letter of acknowledgement to Sir David Orr expressed congratulations to all council staff on their achievements over the year.

General Belgrano

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he now intends to take as a result of the Foreign Affairs Committee report on the circumstances surrounding the sinking of the General Belgrano on 1-2 May 1982.

Mr. Renton: We will respond in the normal way to this report. It would be wrong to anticipate that reply. The House will meanwhile be aware that the Report concludes that the attack on the General Belgrano was authorised for legitimate military reasons.

GCHQ

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has conveniently available statistics for the number of former Government communications headquarters' employees doing contract work for Government communications headquarters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: It is not our practice to give details of the operations of intelligence and security agencies.

Nicaragua

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has held with other European Economic Community countries concerning a European military presence in Nicaragua; whether he would support such a presence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: None. The San Jose conference last September agreed on the need for adequate verification and control of a Contadora Act. This would require a peacekeeping force in the region but this matter has not been raised with us by the Central American participants.

Disarmament

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the outcome of the sixth session of the conference on confidence and security-building measures and disarmament in Europe; and what response was made to the Soviet draft treaty on the non-use of force tabled at the fifth session on 29 January.

Mr. Luce: As I told my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) earlier today, we and our allies worked during the sixth session to keep attention focused on the practical measures contained in our package. As for a treaty on the non-use of force, we have consistently said that we are willing to consider an appropriate reaffirmation of that principle in the context of agreement on practical confidence and security-building measures.

Non-proliferation Treaty (Review Conference)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what will be the United Kingdom ministerial representation at the non-proliferation treaty review conference in Geneva in September; and whether the United Kingdom will be submitting any substantive proposals to that conference.

Mr. Luce: I shall lead our delegation to the conference, which I expect to address on 29 August. We shall urge the parties to reaffirm the success of the non-proliferation treaty in preventing the further spread of nuclear weapons and its consequent importance to the security of all states. We shall also stress our view that the treaty should be reviewed in a balanced and constructive manner and that it would be strengthened further if membership were universal.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made by the Turbanski ad hoc committee, and its three working groups, at the conference on disarmament; and what part has been played by United Kingdom negotiators in the discussions.

Mr. Luce: The United Kingdom delegation to the Conference on Disarmament is participating actively in the work of the ad hoc committee on chemical weapons chaired by Ambassador Turbanski. Progress has not been as rapid as we should like. But encouraging consensus seems to be emerging on some issues in the working group: in particular on definitions of certain key chemical precursors, initial declaration of chemical weapons stocks and the prohibition of use.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response there has been at the conference on disarmament in Geneva to working paper CD/575, tabled by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Shoreham (Mr. Luce) on 12 March, relating to inspection of civilian chemical plants; and what action has been taken on papers CD/353 and CD/431, previously tabled by United Kingdom Ministers.

Mr. Luce: The details of CD/575 are still being considered, although most responses have been generally favourable. There are already signs that some delegations intend to build on this paper. CD/575 rested heavily on the encouraging response to CD/353 which is therefore now substantially overtaken. CD/431 remains on the table at the Conference on Disarmament. We are still waiting for a constructive Soviet response to the vital issue of challenge inspection.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the outcome of the 36th round of mutual and balanced force reduction talks in Vienna.

Mr. Luce: There is no significant progress to report from the mutual and balanced force reduction talks in Vienna. During the 36th round, which ended on 11 July, we together with our allies, continued our probing of Eastern positions related to their proposal of 14 February.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on the western reponse to the eastern bloc proposals tabled on 14 February at the 35th round of the mutual and balanced force reduction talks in Vienna.

Mr. Luce: As I told my hon. Friend the Member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) on 26 June at column 411, we are continuing to study carefully the Eastern proposal of 14 February, the East having rejected our previous efforts to break the longstanding deadlock in the talks.

Israeli Exports

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest position regarding the negotiations within the European Community relating to Israeli agricultural exports to Europe after the accession of Spain to the Community.

Mr. Luce: Following the Foreign Affairs Council declaration of 30 March on the European Community's Mediterranean policy, the Commission have recently made proposals on maintaining agricultural trade access for the Community's Mediterranean partners after enlargement. These proposals have now to be considered within the Community before the Council can decide on a mandate for negotiations. We hope the process will be complete in time for the Community to begin negotiations with the Mediterranean partners before the end of the year.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response has been made by the Warsaw pact powers to the working documents tabled in working groups A and B at the fifth session of the Stockholm conference on confidence and security-building measures.

Mr. Luce: During the fifth session, we and our allies circulated six working documents amplifying our original proposals, as part of our effort to keep such practical measures at the heart of the conference's discussions. To that end we were successful, though the Warsaw Pact has yet to show a willingness to move towards agreement on that basis.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on recent discussions with European Economic Community Foreign Ministers concerning relations with central America.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I last discussed this subject with my colleagues at the Foreign Affairs Council on 22 July. We dealt in particular with the negotiating mandate for the European Community/Central America cooperation agreement.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, at the latest available date, what is his best estimate of the number of (a) men and (b) women receiving supplementary benefit as unemployed in the following age bands: 16 to 17, 18 to 20, 21 to 24, and 25 to 59 years, respectively; and for each age group (a) how many had a dependent partner (i) and dependent children and (ii) without dependent children and (b) how many did not have a dependent partner and were paid benefit (y) as a single householder and (z) as a single non-householder, or the nearest available figures.

Mr. Whitney: The provisional information for December 1983, the latest date for which information is available, is as follows:

(thousands)

	(a) Men				(b) Women
	16-17	18-20	21-24	25-59	16-17	18-20	21-24	25-59
Receiving benefit as unemployed	94	226	224	860	68	146	62	136
(a) (i) with dependent partner and children	1	11	51	393	*	*	*	*
(ii) with dependent partner without dependent children	1	7	17	117	*	*	*	*
(b) (y) Without dependent partner and paid benefit as a householder†‡	2	18	38	187	3	18	19	100
(z) Without dependent partner and paid benefit as a non-householder‡	87	181	107	121	62	124	41	32

* Less than 500.
† Includes joint householders.
‡ Includes single parents signing on as unemployed.
Note: The figures shown from (a)(i) to (b)(z) do not add up to the number shown as receiving benefit as unemployed because claimants without a partner who are paid benefit as boarders etc. are excluded.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the breakdown from 1980 to the latest available date for the category of supplementary benefit claimants classified as living in local authority part III accommodation and other comparable homes into those who were (a) in local authority part III accommodation and (b) comparable homes for (i) all claimants and (ii) claimants classified as being sick and disabled.

Mr. Whitney: The reply is as follows:

(thousands)

	Number of claimants in local authority Part III accommodation*		Number of claimants in comparable homes†
	All claimants	Sick and disabled‡	All claimants	Sick and disabled‡
December 1980	39	14	13	1
December 1981	39	17	13	1
December 1982	34	17	16	2
December 1983 (provisional)	30	15	26	2

* The figures given include claimants both in homes owned and run by local authorities and in private and voluntary homes who are sponsored by local authorities; separate figures for the two types of homes are not available.
† The figures given include claimants in both residential care homes and nursing homes; separate figures for the two types of homes are not available.
‡ People claiming supplementary benefit because of sickness and disability.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many supplementary benefit claimants were classified as being sick and disabled from 1983 until the latest available date; and of these how many were (i) receiving an additional requirement of some kind, (ii) in receipt of a contributory benefit, (iii) in receipt of the long-term rate of supplementary benefit, (iv) living in local authority part III accommodation or other comparable homes and (v) had been in receipt of supplementary benefit for less than six months.

Mr. Newton: Provisional information for December 1983, the latest date for which information is available, is as follows:

*Number of supplementary benefit claimants classified as being sick and disabled

	Thousands
Total number	242
(i) receiving an additional requirement	150
(ii) in receipt of a contributory benefit†	76
(iii) In receipt of long-term rate of supplementary benefit	169
(iv) living in local authority Part III accommodation or other comparable homes‡	17
(v) in receipt of supplementary benefit for less than 6 months	49

* People claiming supplementary benefit because of sickness and disablement.
† Sickness and invalidity benefit.
‡ Includes claimants in private and voluntary nursing homes; separate figures for claimants in residential care homes and claimants in nursing homes are not available.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many supplementary benefit claimants in 1983 and in each subsequent year were receiving amounts of additional requirements that were (a) more than £3·50 a week, (b) more than £5·00 a week, (c) more than £7·00 a week and (d) more than £10·00 a week.

Mr. Whitney: Provisional estimates for December 1983, the latest date for which information is available, are as follows:

	Number (thousands)
(a) more than £3·50 a week	1,210
(b) more than £5·00 a week	605
(c) more than £7·00 a week	117
(d) more than £10·00 a week	17

NB: The amounts are those included for additional requirements in the assessment of supplementary benefit. The amount of additional requirements paid could be less than the figures shown because of the effect of the available scale margin for those on the long-term rate of benefit and because of claimants' other income.
Source: "Annual Statistical Enquiry 1983".

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average disregard for work expenses for people working and claiming supplementary benefit in (a) the London borough of Camden, (b) the London borough of Barnet, (c) Greater London and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not available.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the implications for the interaction between the payment of family credit and housing benefit, with reference to the number of weeks' pay slips on which housing benefit applications will be based.

Mr. Newton: We shall consider the length of the period over which average earnings will normally be estimated for housing benefit once the main structure is settled. The arrangements for family credit will be one of the factors we shall take into account.

Unemployment (Bonus Payment)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the cost of paying unemployed persons a bonus of four weeks' benefit for each complete year of unemployment in respect of up to three complete years' unemployment and the number of persons in each year group.

Mr. Whitney: The information is given in the table. The number of unemployed persons represents those who were in receipt of unemployment or supplementary benefit in Great Britain in November 1984, the latest date for which figures are available.

Duration of Unemployment	Unemployed Persons	Number of Weeks bonus per person	Cost £ million
Between 1 and 2 years	425,100	4	65·4
Between 2 and 3 years	244,800	8	75·3
Over 3 years	346,400	12	159·8
TOTAL	1,016,300		300·5

Family Income

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish estimates for 1985 of the information on family incomes provided in the reply of 3 July to the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington, (Mr. Forman) Official Report, columns 177-78.

Mr. Whitney: It is not possible at present to make reliable estimates for any year later than 1981.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current average time taken to process an application for family income supplement.

Mr. Whitney: Three weeks.

Dental Treatment

Mr. Galley: asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of dental treatments, carried out by the general dental service and examined by the dental reference service of his Department, were found to be satisfactory for the latest year for which figures are available; what is his estimate of the percentage of treatment in the general dental service which is unnecessary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In 1984 93·3 per cent. of dental treatments examined by our Department's Dental Reference Service were found to be wholly or mainly satisfactory. In a further 5 per cent. of cases not all the treatments were unsatisfactory. These figures almost certainly understate the extent of satisfactory treatment in the General Dental Service as a whole since examinations are not made entirely on a random basis.

We are not able at present to estimate accurately the percentage of treatment which is unnecessary but the committee of inquiry we have established is expected to report their findings on this question in the near future.

General Dental Council (Prosecutions)

Mr. Lyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many prosecutions initiated by the General Dental Council have taken place in each of the past five years in respect of the supply of dentures direct to members of the public by dental technicians.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: This is the responsibility of the General Dental Council and not of Ministers. I understand that the numbers of prosecutions were as follows:

	Number
1981	2
1982	5
1983	2

Mucolytics

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what representations his Department has had from the National Deaf Children's Society about prescribing mucolytic drugs under the National Health Service; if there is any action he is taking; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if there is any action he has taken to restore mucodyne as a prescribable drug under the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received a number of letters about the exclusion of oral mucolytics from National Health Service prescription including two from the National Deaf Children's Society. We asked the recently established Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs to consider this group of drugs, which includes mucodyne, at their first meetings. They began their consideration of these drugs yesterday but have not yet reached their conclusions.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received regarding the non-inclusion of mucodyne on the restricted list.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received a number of letters and other representations about the drug mucodyne and other oral mucolytics. The recently established Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs is now considering submissions from the manufacturers of these drugs as a matter of priority.

Open University

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give urgent consideration to making funds available to the Open University as a notional mark-up on the fees paid by disabled students in a similar way to that in which the extra costs of students in prisons are met; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I recognise that the Open University provides a valuable service for disabled students, but it would not be appropriate to use the Department's funds for educational purposes in the way the hon. Member suggests. The Department of Education and Science awards the Open University a block grant which is intended to provide for the university's costs, including those incurred in connection with disabled students.

Disabled People

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether a family with more than one disabled child will be eligible for a disabled child's premium for second and subsequent children as well as a disabled child's addition for the first child;

(2) whether people who are receiving the disability premium on income support because they receive mobility allowance will retain the premium even when their mobility allowance is withdrawn after they reach 75 years;

(3) whether blindness will act as a qualifying condition for a disabled child's premium in the new income support scheme;

(4) whether (a) the Government intend to introduce a premium for those caring for disabled people in the new income support scheme, (b) such a premium would be available to partners of the claimant who are carers and (c) whether it would be paid on top of any other disability premium being received by the assessment unit;

(5) whether age-related premiums will be available in the income support scheme where either the claimant or the claimant's partner meets the age condition specified;

(6) when he expects to be able to reply to a letter from the Disability Alliance containing a series of questions about the proposed income support scheme; and if he will publish his reply in the Official Report;

(7) whether the qualifying conditions for the disability premiums under the proposed income support scheme are to be the same for (a) a disabled claimant of whatever age, (b) a disabled partner of a claimant of whatever age and (c) a disabled child;

(8) whether a person who (a) becomes blind after the age of 60 years or (b) who is blind and first claims income support after the age of 60 years will be eligible for the higher pensioner premium.

Mr. Newton: My letter to Disability Alliance of 19 July covers the points raised by the hon. Member. The text is as follows:

Thank you for your "open letter" of 14 June about the social security review in relation to disabled people. While I found it disappointing that the briefing paper which accompanied it made no attempt at a serious and balanced assessment of the proposals, and indeed does not even mention the fact that the disablement premium would be payable six months sooner than the present long-term scale rate, the questions you posed are a helpful contribution to the process of discussion on which we are now embarked.

Some of your questions relate to detailed points which are precisely the kind of issues on which we will welcome views during the consultation period. In other cases, the implication of your questions appear to show some difficulties over matters that we thought we have made clear in the Green Paper. Consequently, I think the most helpful approach would be to give a fuller version of the relevant arrangements envisaged in the Green Paper in order to clarify our thinking. In doing so, I would like to emphasise that, both on these points and all the others you raise, we shall welcome your own comments (to the extent that they are not already implicit in the way you have phrased the questions themselves). I should mention, though, that your comments on the proposed capital rule for housing benefit appear to overlook the fact that investment income will be ignored, whereas it is at present taken into account.

Each person would receive a personal allowance which would vary according to whether he or she is aged under 25 or 25 and above. The dividing point is the 25th birthday. There would be separate rates for couples above and below 25—where either partner was 25 or more, the over 25 rate would be paid. Any claimant with a dependent child or children would also receive a flat rate family premium; this would be payable in addition to the age-related amounts payable in respect of each child which would continue (your briefing paper does not make this clear).

Any claimant satisfying the relevant qualifying conditions would receive a client group premium. The qualifying conditions for the disablement premium would be for either partner to be in receipt of attendance allowance, mobility allowance, invalidity benefit or severe disablement allowance or for the claimant to be exempt from the requirement to be available for work on the grounds of incapacity for 28 weeks. The qualifying conditions for the premium for pensioners is for either partner to have reached the age of 60. However, there would be a higher premium for pensioners payable where either partner has reached the age of 80 or is in receipt of attendance allowance, mobility allowance or invalidity pension; it would also be payable to those who were already receiving the disablement premium when they reached age 60. All lone parents over the age of 18 would be eligible for the rate of personal allowance payable to those age 25 and above. Lone parents would also qualify for a specific client group premium, as well as their receipt of family premium (by definition). Finally, if the family contains a child in receipt of mobility allowance or attendance allowance, then a double family premium would be payable.

The premiums would be flat rate and would not vary according to a person's age or other circumstances. If someone has underlying eligibility for two client group premiums, then only one — the higher — would be paid. There would be separate rates of the client group premiums for single and married claimants — we have in mind that the distinction would be related to marital status rather than married couples on the basis that, in this context, needs overlap. Just as the family premium itself would be a flat rate payment regardless of the number of children so we envisage that only one double family premium would be payable in respect of each family.

So, to take your example a lone parent would be entitled to the 25 plus rate of personal allowance, the family premium, and one only of the lone parent or disablement or pensioners premiums.

Blindness would be a qualification for the disablement premium in exactly the same way as receipt of one of the benefits listed above. Thus, a blind person would be eligible for the disablement premium even if he or she was capable of work, a blind partner would bring entitlement to the premium, and a person would gain entitlement to the higher pensioner premium where the onset of blindness was after the age of 60. A dependent child who was blind would attract the double family premium, regardless of whether he or she received attendance allowance or mobility allowance. We have not reached a final decision on whether the qualifying condition for the disablement premium on grounds of blindness would be any different from that for the additional requirement for blindness. As you say any new arrangements would need to be operable throughout Great Britain.

There are no proposals in the Green Paper to increase the age of entitlement to income support. As to the structure of support for children, we have invited comment in particular on the current age bands, floating an alternative to the present structure. We shall examine this further in the light of the comments we receive.

I think it is clear that there would be no separate provision in the structure of income support for any residual housing costs such as charges for emptying septic tanks or the cost of repairs and insurance. Some of the other areas you list, for example payment to co-owners and crown tenants, we shall have to consider further to decide whether any of them might be better catered for under housing benefit than income support. Similarly a separate "rent addition" does not fit within the structure of income support as we envisage it and we shall consider this as we consider the wider implications of our arrangements for the system of non-dependant deductions.

On resources, the increased earnings disregard of £15 we have in mind for people receiving the disability premium would apply to the couple as a whole. It will apply either to the earnings of a single person or to the sum of the earnings of a couple in the relatively infrequent circumstances where both partners work. The Green paper seems to me clear enough on our proposals on the treatment of work expenses. We shall be considering the treatment of other forms of income, such as from boarders and child minding, in examining the detail of current rules as we work up the new scheme. Similarly, we shall have to look at the treatment of particular types of capital.

We will be giving further consideration to the position of carers and shall be interested to have views on the treatment of this group within the sort of structure we are aiming at. Nor have we yet formed a view on such details as the effect on claimants of changes to their benefit entitlement in 1989 or the question of inheritance of certain entitlement.

The extension of the work exclusion rule to circumstances where either claimant is in work tidies up an anomaly that has existed since the introduction of equal treatment. In a benefit which is intended for people not in work and where the rules now allow either of a partnership to claim benefit,, then it is equally logical to apply the basic exclusion of those in work where either partner is in employment.

On the estimate of 50,000 long-term sick and disabled claimants not receiving an additional requirement, I refer you to table 34.41 of the published social security statistics for 1983. You will have noted our recent proposal to extend a heating addition automatically to sick and disabled householders on the long-term rate. So far as transitional protection is concerned, for those on supplementary benefit, we would ensure that, at the time of the change, income support payments make up regular cash income to at least the same level as supplementary benefit did before.

I hope this clarification is helpful. We shall of course look forward to receiving your considered and constructive comments on the Green Paper.

Michelle Bartlett

Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set up an inquiry into the case of Michelle Bartlett who was in the care of the Social Services Department of the London borough of Wandsworth at the children's home, Wilna Road, Wandsworth.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mobility Allowance

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of (a) abolishing the upper and lower age restrictions for the receipt of mobility allowance, (b) abolishing just the upper age restriction for the receipt of mobility allowance in 1990 and 1995 and (c) abolishing the upper age restriction for applications for mobility allowance; and how many extra people would receive mobility allowance in each of these cases.

Mr. Newton: It has been estimated that removing the age limits for mobility allowance altogether would cost some £340 million a year. This estimate is now being updated and I shall write to the hon. Member when the information requested is available.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are currently in receipt of mobility allowance in (a) the London borough of Camden, (b) the London borough of Barnet, (c) Greater London and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information is not available.

War Widow Pensioners

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if there has been a review of the position of war widow pensioners; if any new proposals are envisaged by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Whilst the position of war widow pensioners has not been the subject of any special review, their position is continually kept under consideration. As a result, last November, for example, we made substantial real improvements in the age allowances payable with war widows' pensions.

Amputees (Chiropody Treatment)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now review the provision of chiropody treatment on the National Health Service for amputees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Handicapped people, including amputees, are already recognised as one of the priority groups for receiving National Health Service chiropody treatment.

Motability (Amputees)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now take steps to extend the provision of automatic gear boxes through Motability for all leg amputees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: For war pensioners who obtain a car through Motability, the Department make grants for any adaptations, including the provision of an automatic gear-box, that are necessary to enable the pensioner to drive. The circumstances in which war pensioners, including leg amputees, can qualify for an automatic gear-box will be extended later this year. All war pensioners who are unable to use a foot clutch will be regarded as satisfying the criteria for an automatic gear-box. This will include all left-leg amputees and those right-leg amputees who are unable to operate a manual gear change.

Amputees (Phantom Pains)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will reconsider his decision regarding the availability on the National Health Service of Frisium, Sulphadine and Rivotril medication for treating phantom pains for amputees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I assume the hon. Member is referring to frisium, solpadeine and rivotril. Rivotril is already prescribable under the National Health Service. The advisory committee on NHS drugs will be free to reconsider at any time the need for the other drugs mentioned, either on its own initiative or in response to representations from doctors or the pharmaceutical industry. I understand that, as a result of such representations, the advisory committee is likely to look at frisium at an early stage. We have not received any formal representations in respect of solpadeine.

Board and Lodging

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications for exemptions from the new board and lodging regulations are waiting to be processed in Portsmouth.

Mr. Ray Whitney: There are currently four cases in the Portsmouth local area for which consideration is being given to exemption from the time limits on payment as a boarder.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many exemptions have been given to the new board and lodging regulations in Portsmouth;

(2) how many people in Portsmouth were receiving board and lodging allowances at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that the analyses of board and lodging in all local offices including Portsmouth, following the 29 April changes, have not yet been completed. Prior to this date, information on the number of supplementary benefit claimants receiving board and lodging allowances was not available separately.

Mr. Tony Loyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to include refugees as a group exempted from the board and lodgings regulations.

Mr. Whitney: Refugees are able to qualify for exemption from the time limits for payments as a boarder under the present rules. We are however looking urgently at the operation of exemptions to see whether any changes are necessary with reference to refugees.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the current cost of extending invalid care allowance to (a) married and cohabiting women and (b) everybody who is caring for at least 35 hours a week, regardless of whether the person being cared for is receiving attendance allowance (i) gross and (ii) after taking into account savings on other benefits; and, taking account of the extra tax that would be received by the Government, how many extra people would receive invalid care allowance in cases (a) and (b).

Mr. Newton: The cost of extending invalid care allowance to married and cohabitating women at current rates is estimated to be £108 million a year gross and £85 million a year net of savings on other benefits. No significant tax returns would be likely to accrue from such an extension. About 96,500 women would be likely to qualify for the allowance either at the full rate or partially offset by other benefits. I regret there is no information available on which an estimate could be made of the cost of extending invalid care allowance to those caring for a person who has no entitlement to attendance allowance.

Tobacco Sachets

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information is available to him about the medical effects of the sale, promotion and consumption of Skoal Bandit tobacco sachets in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) why the Chief Medical Officer has written to all doctors about the dangers of sucking tobacco contained in a sachet; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he has yet reached a voluntary agreement with the producers of Skoal Bandits on the marketing of the product; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Health Authorities (Ancillary Service Contracts)

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he takes to satisfy himself that the specifications given by district health authorities in England to those tendering for ancillary services contracts mirror those required to be met previously by in-house operators.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We expect health authorities to review their requirements before producing specifications. All tenderers, whether in-house or private contractors, then have to submit tenders to meet the same specifications.

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is advising district health authorities in England of the best current practice in putting their ancillary services out to competitive tender.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have given health authorities detailed advice on the procedures for putting these services out to competitive tender, but we are reviewing whether any further advice is needed to ensure fair and open competition.

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many district health authorities in England, after putting their catering, domestic and laundry services, respectively, out to competitive tender, have decided to keep the services in-house.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are aware of 66 health authorities which have decided after tendering to keep part of these services in-house.

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will take steps to increase the number of district health authorities in England putting their ancillary services out to competitive tender.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We expect all health authorities to put out their support services to competitive tender and we are monitoring their progress closely. Considerable savings are being achieved by those authorities that have gone out to tender and these savings are being used to improve services to patients.

Health Authorities (Administrative Costs)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current cost in salaries and expenses of managers of regional and district health authorities compared with the equivalent sums paid to their administrative predecessors.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: General managers are not direct successors to administrators and the job is a quite different one. Managers have been appointed from several disciplines inside the service or from outside the service. Our main priority when a general manager has been appointed is to review the whole of the existing senior management structure to reflect the introduction of general management within the authority. The cost of any changes, including the general manager's own salary cost, has to be met within the total provision for management.

Dental Charges

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the highest charges levied for a course of routine National Health Service dental treatment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is £115. We estimate that, even when courses for treatment which include non-routine treatment are taken into account, only about 0·3 per cent. of all courses of treatment will attract this charge.

Sight Tests

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make it his policy to require ophthalmic opticians to carry out tests for glaucoma and other identifiable conditions when carrying out a routine National Health Service sight test on any person over 40 years and on any person with a family history of any of these diseases.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The use of ophthalmoscopy for the detection of glaucoma and other indentifiable diseases is already part of the routine sight test carried out under the general ophthalmic service (GOS). There is also a requirement on GOS practitioners to inform the patient's doctor if any abnormality is detected in the course of the sight test. We are satisfied that these arrangements provide the necessary safeguards for patients.

Hospital Consultants

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total payment to hospital consultants in each year since 1974 in constant prices.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The table shows gross expenditure by health authorities on medical and dental consultants between 1974-75 and 1983-84. The figures are expressed at 1983-84 price levels as measured by the Gross Domestic Product deflator.

Year	Cost of medical and dental consultants employed by health authorities

Insurance Contributions

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set out in a table the national insurance contributions liability of (a) contracted-in employees through class 1, (b) contracted-out employees through class 1, (c) self-employed people through class 2 contributions and (d) self-employed people through class 4 contributions in 1985-86 and showing for employees and the self-employed the total amount due in the year and the weekly equivalent and showing separately and in the total the effects of the tax relief available on class 4 contributions, assuming their income is at the following constant levels throughout the year: £35·50 per week, £55·00 per week, £59·00 per week, £89·00 per week, £90·00 per week, £130·00 per week, £146·00 and £265·00 per week, respectively, and £1,925 per year and £4,150 per year, respectively: 0·5, 0·75, 1·0, 1·5 and 2·0 times average earnings and at a level of income to pay income tax at 40 per cent., 45 per cent., 50 per cent., 55 per cent. and 60 per cent., respectively.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is in the table.

Notes:

1. This is the amount gained in tax relief on half the class 4 contribution.
2. Average earnings have been taken from the Department of Employment's provisional earnings figures for April 1985 in respect of all employees in all occupations.
3. The rates quoted are:
   R1 =9·00 per cent.
   R2*=5·00 per cent.
   R3*=7·00 per cent.
   R4 =9·00 per cent. of £35·50 plus 6·85 per cent. of earnings over £39·50.
   R5*=7·00 per cent. of £35·50 plus 4·85 per cent. of earnings over £35·50 if earnings are between £35·50 and £39·99.
   R6*=5·00 per cent. of £35·50 plus 2·85 per cent. of earnings over £39·50 if earnings are between £35·50 and £54·99.
   * Payable from 6 October 1985.
4. The class 2 rate of £3·50 is payable from 6 October 1985. The figures assume that those with earnings below £1,925 claim small earnings exemption.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the differences between the benefits received by a person who pays contracted-out class 1 national insurance as an employee and one who pays class 2 and 4 national insurance as self-employed; and if he will show that part of the contribution that pays for each of the extra benefits received in each case.

Mr. Whitney: The following list sets out the contributory benefits paid in return for class 1 contributions to people satisfying the necessary conditions:

Unemployment benefit
Sickness benefit
Invalidity benefit
Maternity allowance
Retirement pension
Widow's allowance
Widowed mother's allowance
Widow's pension
Child's special allowance
Death grant

People paying self-employed contributions do not receive unemployment benefit, an additional component to retirement pension and invalidity benefit, or industrial injuries benefits.

There is no simple relation between specific parts of the contribution and particular benefits. Cmnd. 7036 described the formula for calculating the self-employed contribution rates, and these rates were last reviewed according to this formula for 1983-84. Deductions were made from the joint class 1 rate of 19·45 per cent. amounting to 1·9 per cent. in respect of short term benefits for which the self-employed are not eligible and 14·2 per cent. on earnings over the lower earnings limit in respect of earnings related pensions. The class 2 and 4 rates were then chosen so as to produce the same revenue as this notional class 1 rate would have raised from the self-employed. The class 2 rate has been uprated in line with changes in the basic pension but abatements from the actuarial rate have been in force as a concession. This abatement will rise to £1·75 per week following the introduction of proposals in the 1985 Budget.

Single Payments

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many single payments for clothing were made to residents of (a) Camden, (b) Barnet, (c) Greater London and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras in 1984; and what was the average payment in each case;

(2) how many single payments for rent deposits were made to residents of (a) Camden, (b) Barnet, (c) Greater London and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras in 1984; and what was the average payment in each case;

(3) how many single payments for baby items were made to people in (a) Camden, (b) Barnet, (c) Greater London and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras in 1984; and what was the average payment in each case;

(4) how many single payments for removal expenses were made to residents of (a) Camden, (b) Barnet, (c) Greater London and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras in 1984; and what was the average payment in each case;

(5) how many single payments for furniture and household items were made to residents of (a) Camden, (b) Barnet, (c) Greater London and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras in 1984; and what was the average payment in each case;

(6) how many single payments for fuel debts were made to residents of (a) Camden, (b) Barnet, (c) Greater London and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras in 1984; and what was the average payment in each case;

Mr. Whitney: This information is not collected on a local basis. The Supplementary Benefits "Annual Statistical Enquiry" provides detailed information about single payments on a national basis. but as the information collected relates only to single payments made over the preceding 12 months to claimants still in receipt of supplementary benefit at the time of the "Enquiry", it does not reflect all the payments made during the year.

The following national figures are based on the provisional results of the 1983 "Enquiry" (the latest available):

Purpose of single payment	Number of payments	Average amounts £
Maternity needs	141,948	59·91
Removal expenses	38,427	58·20
Clothing and footwear	113,413	48·61
Fuel bills	11,375	55·29
Furniture (and houshold equipment)	653,796	84·56
Furniture repair	84,328	34·55
Bedding	366,841	53·53
Deposits (for rent)	3,588	70·30

Additional Requirements

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many residents of (a) Camden, (b) Barnet, (c) Greater London and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras, respectively, are currently in receipt of additional requirements; and what is the average entitlement in each case.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not collected on a local basis.

The Supplementary Benefits "Annual Statistical Enquiry", which is a sample survey of claimants' entitlement at a particular point in time, provides detailed information on a national basis. The provisional results of the 1983 "Enquiry" (the latest available) show that 3,676,000 weekly payments for additional requirements were being made in December that year at an average rate of £3·46.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are currently in receipt of attendance allowance in (a) the London borough of Camden, (b) the London borough of Barnet, (c) Greater London and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras.

Mr. Newton: At 31 March 1984, the latest date for which figures are available, an estimated 42,150 recipients of attendance allowance resided in the Greater London council area. I regret that information is not available in respect of individual London boroughs.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many occupational pensioners there are in (a) the London borough of Camden, (b) the London borough of Barnet, (c) Greater London and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how he proposes to seek the help of the Occupational Pensions Board in advising on, and developing, the Green Paper proposals on occupational pensions.

Mr. Fowler: The board's advisory role, as set out in the Social Security Act 1973, is to advise the Secretary of State on matters that are referred to them. Last year I asked them to advise me on the legislative and administrative implications of personal pensions and their report was made available when I published a consultative document on personal pensions. I have now asked them to advise me on the future administration of the contracting-out arrangements for which they are responsible. I have therefore referred the following remit to the board:

"To consider, in the light of the proposals in the Green Paper 'Reform of Social Security', for phasing out the state earnings related pension scheme, how the arrangements administered by the Board might be simplified or streamlined; whether this would require legislative changes; and to report".

Child Benefit

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are in receipt of child benefit, and in respect of how many children, in (a) the London borough of Camden, (b) the London borough of Barnet, (c) Greater London and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras, respectively.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not available. Child benefit is administered centrally and records are not kept for individual localities.

Income Support

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what kind of presence test for the purpose of entitlement to income support the Government is proposing.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Peckham on 22 July 1985.

Disablement Pensioners

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many war disablement pensioners there are in (a) the London borough of Camden, (b) the London borough of Barnet, (c) Greater London and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras.

Mr. Newton: The information is not available in the precise form requested.

There are an estimated 25,000 war disablement pensioners in Greater London. This includes 1,500 in the area covered by the London boroughs of Brent, Camden and Harrow; and 2,700 in the area covered by the London boroughs of Barnet, Enfield and Haringey.

Urgent Needs Payment

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people received urgent needs payment in 1984 in each of (a) the London borough of Camden, (b) the London borough of Barnet, (c) Greater London and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras;

(2) how many single payments were made to residents of (a) Camden, (b) Barnet, (c) Greater London and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras in 1984; and what was the average payment in each case.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Medicines Commission

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive the Medicines Commission's annual report for 1984.

Mr. John Patten: I have received the Report and copies have today been laid before both Houses of Parliament in accordance with section 5(2) of the Medicines Act 1968. Bound volumes have been placed in the Library, and are also available to hon. Members from the Vote Office, containing the 1984 reports of the Medicines Commission, the Committee on Safety of Medicines, the Veterinary Products Committee, the British Pharmacopoeia Commission, the Committee on the Review of Medicines and the Committee on Dental and Surgical materials.

Medical Gases and Oxygen

Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will now provide the British Oxygen Company with copies of the consultants' reports which his Department obtained on the pricing of medical gases and domiciliary oxygen, which were referred to in the twelfth report of the Committee of Public Accounts, House of Commons paper No. 67 Session 1984-85.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I understand that the British Oxygen Company wish to have copies of the reports to enable them to respond to criticisms made of them by the hon. Member for Workington concerning the accuracy of evidence submitted by the company to the Committee of Public Accounts. However, as the two documents contain material relevant to our Department's negotiations with the company, it would not be right to release them. I can say however that I am not aware of anything in the consultants' reports which casts doubt on the factual accuracy of BOC's evidence.

Mentally Handicapped Children

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what further plans he has for ensuring that children in long-stay mental handicap hospitals are moved out of hospitals.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1985]: Our stated objective is that all children in long stay mental handicap hospitals should come out. Their number has dropped by at least half since December 1980 and the fall continues, helped by our children's initiative. Under this we have made £1 million central finance available from 1981 on a pound for pound basis to voluntary bodies, and £9 million over four years from 1983-84 to health authorities, to help them to move mentally handicapped children out of hospital into smaller more homelike accommodation in the community. The pace is kept up by our clear guidance to health authorities to review with local authorities the cases of the remaining children in their care every six months with a view to more suitable placement. In our examination of health authorities' plans for alternative provision we are looking for any need to raise the question of speed.

WALES

Co-operative Development and Training Centre Ltd.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now ensure that the Wales Co-operative Development and Training Centre Ltd. is given a prior assurance of continued support from his Department for a further period of five years.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: An application has been received from the centre for further funding and is being considered.

Farm Capital Grant Schemes

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many claims were paid under the capital grant scheme for new roads or the improvement of existing roads; and what was the eligible cost of these and the amount of grant paid on them for each quarter of 1984 and the first quarter of 1985.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: The information in respect of farm capital grant schemes is as follows:

Quarter Ended	Number of Payments	Eligible Cost	Grant Paid
31 March 1984	434	3,451,704	1,631,644
30 June 1984	428	3,207,830	1,510,730
30 September	305	2,751,071	1,181,686
31 December 1984	233	1,626,618	691,071
31 March 1985	278	1,986,268	791,614

Docklands (Cardiff)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of proposals for docklands redevelopment in south Cardiff.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Following confirmation of the compulsory purchase orders in respect of the relevant land on 16 July, I am pleased to say that I have now approved the detailed terms under which urban development grant will be payable. This is a further important step forward which opens the way for development work to begin this autumn.

THE ARTS

Orchestras

Mr. Cohen asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts what is his estimate of the total of public funds spent on orchestras for each of the last five years.

Mr. Waldegrave: Total expenditure by the Arts Council of Great Britain on the principal orchestras in Britain for each of the past five years was as follows:

	£ million
1980-81	3·860
1981-82	4·533
1982-83	5·344
1984-85	5·435

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Servants (Redundancies and Early Retirement)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list for the years 1978-79 to 1984-85, by grade and age band and distinguishing between industrial and non-industrial civil servants, the number of civil servants who (i) have been declared compulsorily redundant, (ii) have taken voluntary redundancy and (iii) have taken early retirement, giving in cash terms the per capita cost to the Exchequer of such cessations.

Mr. Hayhoe: Not all the information that the hon. Member has requested is centrally kept. The information that is available is being assembled and I will write to him as soon as this is ready.

Voluntary Retirement

Mr. Favell asked the Minister for the Civil Service how many persons in each of the categories listed in the Report No. 22 of the Top Salaries Review Body, in the Civil Service, armed forces and judiciary, have taken voluntary early retirement in each of the last three years for reasons other than ill health or promotion.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information for premature retirements from the Civil Service and armed forces is as follows:

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Community (Agricultural Support)

82. Mr. Hardy asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he has taken or proposes to take to secure further improvement to the allocation of the resources of the European Economic Community during the year 1986-87; and if he will secure a reduction in the share of those resources devoted to agricultural support.

Mr. Ian Stewart: We shall continue our pressure for the effective application of budgetary discipline, including the guideline for agricultural expenditure in 1986. This is a necessary step to a better balanced Community budget. We shall seek further improvements in succeeding budgets.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the carry over of (i) losses and (ii) allowances in the current financial year against corporation tax in the case of manufacturing industry.

Mr. Moore: The latest estimate is some £10 billion of tax losses of all kinds carried forward by manufacturing industry. The estimate is extremely tentative.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the carry-over of (a) losses and (b) allowances against corporation tax in the current financial year; and what is his estimate of the additional losses and reliefs which will be incurred in 1985 to carry forward.

Mr. Moore: The total of accumulated tax losses is about £25 billion, excluding the public sector. This estimate is extremely tentative. I regret that it is not possible to project with sufficient reliability the extent of changes to this total during 1985.

Fortified Wines

Mr. Fry asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list in the Official Report the names of those companies which have sought and (a) been refused and (b) been granted permission to import fortified wines under bond since March 1984;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the names of those companies which have sought and (a) been refused and (b) been granted permission to blend imported fortified wines under bond since March 1984.

Mr. Hayhoe: The information is not available centrally and cannot be obtained without disproportionate cost. However, if my hon. Friend has a particular problem or case in mind perhaps he would write to me.

Cider

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what revenue arose from excise duty on cider in the years 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83 and 1983-84;

(2) what consultations took place with representatives of the cider industry in advance of the alteration in cider tax in the Finance Bill 1985; and what advice he received.

Mr. Hayhoe: The revenue arising from excise duty on cider and perry is published in the Annual Report of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, table 34. There is a copy in the Library of the House. Representatives of the National Association of Cider Makers and the National Association of Perry Makers met Customs and Excise officials on 27 November 1984. Customs reported this meeting to Treasury Ministers together with the trade's written representations.

Departmental Committees of Inquiry

Mr. Eggar asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 1 May, Official Report, columns 141-2, if he will now take steps to provide the information on departmental committees of inquiry established from 1974 to the present.

Mr. Hayhoe: As I told my hon. Friend on 1 May (col. 141-2) this information could only by compiled at disproportionate cost.

Civil Service

Mr. Chapman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total salary bill for the Civil Service in 1984-85; and how this figure compares with the figure for 1978-79 in historic and constant prices, respectively.

Mr. Hayhoe: The total pay provision of the Civil Service in 1984-85 was £5·4 billion compared to £3·4 billion in 1978-79 in historic prices and £6·1 billion in constant 1984-85 prices, using the GDP deflator.

Income Tax

Mr. Portillo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of total receipts from income tax is paid by taxpayers on average and below average incomes.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 1 July 1985, c. 43]: In 1985-86, average income tax per unit (that is counting husband and wife as one) is provisionally estimated at £8,300. This estimate includes income of all kinds; and covers tax units above and below the income tax threshold. About 18 per cent. of income tax will come from taxpayers with incomes below this level.

Tax Relief

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated cost in 1985-86 of the tax relief on (a) charitable deeds of covenant and (b) non-charitable deeds of covenant.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: I regret that information is not available for 1985-86. In 1984-85, relief in respect of covenants to charities (including higher rate relief to covenanting donors) is estimated at about £115 million. I regret that information is not available in respect of all non-charitable deeds of covenant; but in 1983-84, repayments to students are estimated to have totalled some £55 million.

Income

Mr. Portillo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many income taxpayers there are who are on average or below average earnings.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: Average earnings for male employees (all occupations) paid at adult rates whose pay is unaffected by absence are estimated to be about £10,300 in 1985-86. Some 12·8 million taxpaying tax units (that is counting husband and wife as one) are estimated to have incomes below this level.

Johnson Matthey Bankers

Mr. Torney asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the role played by Mr. Michael Hepker, chairman of Sumrie Clothes, Leeds in the events leading to the collapse of the Johnson Matthey Bankers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fatchett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the role played by Mr. Michael Hepker, chairman of Sumrie Clothes plc, Leeds, in the events leading to the collapse of the Johnson Matthey Bankers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his replies, 22 July 1985]: Detailed questions concerning the affairs of Johnson Matthey Bankers are a matter for the Bank of England.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were (a) proceeded against and (b) found guilty, during 1984 under section 26(1)(c) of the Immigration Act, for making a false statement to an immigration officer or other person in execution of the act.

Mr. Waddington: Figures for 1984 are not yet available. Those for 1979 to 1983 were published in table 21 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1984" (Cmnd. 9544).

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were received into prison department establishments under Immigration Act powers during 1984 by individual prison establishment and nationality.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information is given in the following table:

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average length of detention for those received into prison department establishments under Immigration Act powers during 1984.

Mr. Mellor: The average period of detention in prison department establishments in England and Wales of persons initially received under Immigration Act 1971 powers who were discharged in 1984 was nearly six weeks.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will provide a table indicating the total number of people served with detention orders under paragraph 2, schedule 3 to the Immigration Act during 1984 by nationality.

Mr. Waddington: The available information is as follows:

Probation Service (Pay)

Mr. Mark Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the percentage pay lead of a senior probation officer over a probation officer, both at maximum pay scales on 1 January 1980; what is the equivalent percentage pay lead today; and by how much per annum the salary of a senior probation officer on maximum salary would have to be increased to restore the pay lead over a probation officer on maximum salary to the differential that existed on 1 January 1980.

Mr. Mellor: A senior probation officer at the maximum of the pay scale on 1 January 1980 would have received 116·23 per cent. of the salary of a main-grade probation officer at the maximum. The maximum of the senior probation officer scale is now 113·98 per cent. of the main-grade maximum. To restore the previous percentage differential would require an increase of £252 per annum to the senior probation officer's maximum.

Essex (Chief Constable)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chief constable of Essex; and what was discussed.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend last met the chief constable of Essex briefly on 3 January 1985. I met him on 18 April to discuss the control of shotguns.

Magistrates' Courts

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many new magistrates' courts have been opened since 1983.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Two. But a further 32 schemes for new or adapted courthouses have been given building starts since 1983-84.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Leyton on 9 July, Official Report, column 385, whether the original reference number on the microfilm of a deleted record on the Police National Computer can be traced to the name of an individual or to a file which has not been deleted.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Firearms

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue revised guidelines to chief constables about circumstances where firearms are issued and used; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Every incident in which firearms are used by the police is carefully studied to see whether there are any lessons to be drawn from the incident, but we have no plans at present to revise the guidelines issued in March 1983.

Immigration and Nationality Department

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has made for the Immigration and Nationality Department to publish a further report on its work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brittan: Today a report has been published on the work of the Immigration and Nationality Department, copies of which have been placed in the Library and the Vote Office. This second report is focused on 1984 and early 1985, and contains a range of factual information which can be compared with that published in the earlier report. The text of the report was finalised before the Home Affairs Committee published the report of the Sub-Committee on Race Relations and Immigration on the working of the Immigration and Nationality Department.

Visitors

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of visitors to the United Kingdom in each of the last five years, who have been recorded on the current computer system as those whose embarkation is likely to need checking; if he will provide a breakdown by nationality of those visitors listed above; if he will list the criteria employed in determining the recording of those listed above; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 11 July 1985, c. 505]: The available information is set out in the table.

Paragraph 20 of the Immigration Rules provides for visitors to be admitted for a period less than the normal six months where this is justified by special reasons—for example, where the passenger might not be admitted to another country after a long period in the United Kingdom or where the case ought to be subject to early review. Such cases which will include those where the immigration officer is not entirely satisfied that the visitor will comply with the conditions of his admission are normally recorded on the Department's computer system.

Justices of the Peace Act 1361

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons in England and Wales have been arrested, how many charged and how many convicted under the Justices of the Peace Act 1361 in each of the last five years; and how many of these arrests and charges related to domestic disputes.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 1 July 1985, c. 10-11]: Further investigation of the data used to provide the information in my earlier reply showed the figures to be incorrect. The correct information is given in the following table. The error is much regretted. Corresponding information for 1984 is not yet available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing Inspectors

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many European fishing inspectors have been stationed in (a) Britain, (b) Denmark, (c) Holland and (d) France since the force was established.

Mr. MacGregor: European Inspectors are stationed in Brussels and not in member states. However, the number of visits made by the inspectors to the member states in question since the force was established up to 15 July 1985 is as follows:

		Visits
(a)	Britain	19
(b)	Denmark	11
(c)	Holland	13
(d)	France	16

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the sum available to finance the proposed environmentally sensitive areas to be established under article 19 of the agricultural structures regulations.

Mrs. Fenner: The Government will make available sufficient funds for the designation initially of five or six environmentally sensitive areas. These areas and the levels of payment appropriate to them have not yet been determined.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Nature Conservancy Council and Countryside Commission will be consulted over the detail of individual farm improvement plans within environmentally sensitive areas.

Mrs. Fenner: Decisions on the administration of environmentally sensitive areas must await consideration by Parliament of the necessary legislation.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which authority or statutory body will be responsible for administering the grants and other incentives available to farmers in environmentally sensitive areas once they have been established.

Mrs. Fenner: The Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food will be responsible for administering the environmentally sensitive areas. Decisions on detailed arrangements must await consideration by Parliament of the necessary legislation.

Moorland

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions since 1981 farm capital grants for the reseeding or reclamation of moorland have been refused on conservation grounds in sites of special scientific interest and national parks and in other areas.

Mrs. Fenner: I regret that the Ministry does not keep records of cases where grant has been refused or of the reasons for refusal.

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what checks or other screening exists to prevent damage to moorland by reseeding or regeneration through grant aided agricultural improvements (a) within sites of special scientific interest and national parks and (b) in the wider countryside.

Mrs. Fenner: Applicants under the capital grant schemes must notify the Nature Conservancy Council or a national park authority of any investments they wish to carry out in an SSSI or national park. Throughout the countryside farmers are required under the capital grant schemes to have regard to conservation in undertaking investments. We monitor compliance with this requirement and in the event of any damage we have discretion to refuse grant. Under the proposed new grant arrangements grant will not be available for the reseeding and regeneration of grassland outside the less favoured areas and of heathland and moorland.

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he intends to take to ensure that the extension of the agriculture and horticulture grants scheme until 31 December 1988, giving grant aid for the reseeding of heathland and moorland will not cause significant damage to wildlife habitat outside national parks and sites of special scientific interest.

Mrs. Fenner: The extension of the agriculture and horticulture grant scheme permits claims to be made for reseeding of heathland and moorland only where expenditure was incurred before 9 July 1985. Under the grant schemes farmers are required to have regard to conservation and any breach of this condition will place a farmer's grant at risk.

Animals (Export)

Mr. Murphy asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the export of live animals; what recent representations he has received on this subject; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Fenner: The Government's policy is to allow the export of live food animals to take place under the protection laid down in European Community directives 77/489/EEC and 81/389/EEC. My Department continues to receive letters from various sources on this subject.

Apples and Pears

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the acreage of land utilised for the growing of cider apples and perry pears in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Fenner: The area of land in hectares used for the growing of cider apples and perry pears in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years is as follows:

Year	hectares
1980	4,486
1981	4,398
1982	4,304
1983	4,225
1984	4,274

Fishing Vessels (Licensing)

Dr. Godman asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fishing vessels are licensed to fish for salmon by way of drift-nets off the coast of Northumberland and Yorkshire; and if he has plans to change the licensing system or this method of fishing.

Mr. MacGregor: Licences to fish for salmon are not issued in respect of vessels, but under the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Act 1975, (c51) water authorities license individuals to use a specified type of instrument. In 1984 the Northumbrian Water Authority issued 121 salmon drift net licences and the Yorkshire Water Authority 29 salmon drift net licences. As I said in replies to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) on 24 January and 7 February 1985, we are reviewing the management arrangements for the fishery in these areas and will announce our conclusions when we have completed the review.

Foodstuffs Subsidies

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the subsidies currently payable on each of the principal foodstuffs in total and per unit of sale compared with 1975 in terms of current prices at an annual rate.

Mr. MacGregor: Information on the volume of output of each major product and on the level of expenditure on it are published each year in the "Annual Review of Agriculture".

Crop Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each of the principal crops the amount payable to United Kingdom farmers as a result of the difference between the green pound and the common agricultural policy price.

Mr. MacGregor: The use of a fixed exchange rate (the "green" rate) rather than variable market rates to convert CAP institutional prices in ECUs into sterling results in prices which can be either higher or lower than those which would apply if market rates were used. At present institutional prices for all CAP products in the United Kingdom are 6·3 per cent. above the level that would apply if market rates were used, but this can vary, and indeed, has varied, considerably within short time scales.

Sheep Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the difference between the average guaranteed price and the average market price for home-killed sheepmeat in each year since 1973 and in 1985 to date, together with any additional payments to hill farmers and others on account of sheepmeat or wool production and financed directly or indirectly out of public funds.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

EC (Eggs)

Mr. Corbett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list in the Official Report those individual husbandry experts, and organisations, which he consulted about the European Community egg labelling regulations.

Mr. MacGregor: During the course of recent discussions over amendments to European Community legislation dealing with marketing standards for hen eggs, the Agricultural Departments consulted fully with associations representing farmers, the egg trade and industry, consumers and farm animal welfare interests. In addition representations were received from a number of individuals. Advice was provided by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Services, the Egg Marketing Inspectorate and LACOTS.

Mr. Corbett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report the views of the Farm Animal Welfare Council on the European Community egg labelling regulations.

Mrs. Fenner: The Farm Animal Welfare Council has already published its own views on these regulations in its press notice dated 17 July. I am placing a copy in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Parliamentary Costs

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Lord Privy Seal whether he will publish in the Official Report a table comparing the average cost of both Houses of Parliament including and excluding pay and allowances, each year since 1970 in terms of constant prices.

Mr. Biffen: Total identified costs for the Houses of Parliament for the financial years 1981-82 to 1984-85 are given in the table:

	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85
Cost of Parliament including pay and allowances	56,192	63,463	69,598	77,464
Cost of Parliament excluding Members' pay and allowances and Peers' expenses	35,743	41,419	42,981	48,082

These figures are expressed in cash terms. Figures in terms of constant prices and figures for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate expense.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Lord Privy Seal whether he will publish in the Official Report a table comparing the average cost of paying and supporting an hon. Member of this House with such information as he has as to the comparable figure for supporting a member of the Assembly of the EEC; and if he will compare the total costs of the Commons with such information as he has as to the total costs of the European Assembly, the French National Assembly and the Canadian House of Commons all for latest available date.

Mr. Biffen: The latest available figures on the pay and allowances of parliamentarians which have been compiled on a comparable basis are given in the 20th report of the Review Body on Top Salaries (May 1983). For the British House of Commons and the European Parliament these are as follows:

United Kingdom House of Commons

Salary	Allowances
Basic salary of £14,510. Maximum salary of £15,362 for those who draw the London allowance of £852 pa which is taxable. Whole of salary taxable	£8,752 secretarial allowance; £875 to meet cost of secretarial pension scheme; £4,376 to employ temporary assistance in event of illness of secretary; all maxima £5,518 (maximum) subsistence allowance. £200 allowance to assist in drafting Private Member's Bill. £1,459 to assist in clearing up the affairs of a deceased, retired or defeated Member of Parliament. (Year beginning April 1982)

European Parliament

Salary	Allowances
Same as national Member of Parliament, for example £14,510 for United Kingdom Member of European Parliament. Some countries, for example Belgium allow half of salary tax free.	General allowance of £16,284 but if Member of European Parliament fails to attend at least 50 per cent. of the plenary sessions the allowance is halved. Staff allowances of £16,284 pa to cover salaries, travel and subsistence of staff. Subsistence allowance of £64 per day on sittings and so on.

With regard to the second part of the hon. Gentleman's question, no meaningful comparison could be made on the basis of figures available.

Line of Route

Mr. Silvester asked the Lord Privy Seal what measures are being taken to reduce queues at the entrance to the line of route for visitors to the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Biffen: The Services Committee has approved the following additional measures for visitors to the Line of Route with effect from 21 October 1985:

(1) The special permit system, currently operating between March and July will be taken into use throughout the remainder of the sitting year.

(2) The door at Norman porch will be opened daily at 9.30 am instead of 10 am.

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Changes

Mr. Freud asked the Prime Minister if she now proposes to announce any ministerial changes.

The Prime Minister: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Falkland Islanders

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government will take steps formally to consult the residents of the Falkland Islands by means of a referendum about their attitudes to resettlement with compensation.

The Prime Minister: The Falkland islanders have consistently made clear, through their elected representatives, their desire to remain resident in the islands. We shall continue to protect their right to live there in peace and security under a Government of their own choosing.

Southampton

Mr. Chope asked the Prime Minister whether she will make an official visit to Southampton.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Southall

Mr. Bidwell asked the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Southall.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Research and Development

Sir John Osborn asked the Prime Minister what consideration she will now give to obtaining more up-to-date information on the amount spent on scientific research and development each year, indicating the pattern over recent years, broken up into public and industrial, civil and military, pure and applied, and as a percentage of gross domestic product.

The Prime Minister: Expenditure on research and development in science and technology in the United Kingdom is published biennially in the August edition of Economic Trends. Information in respect of 1983 will be published in the August 1985 edition. Annual data would impose too large a burden on industry as the Government stated in their response to the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology in November 1983. Government expenditure on research and development is published annually in the same edition of Economic Trends.

Eastern Africa

Mr. Hancock asked the Prime Minister if she will seek to visit the drought-stricken areas of eastern Africa.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so, but my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Overseas Development has just returned from a visit to Ethiopia and made a full report to me.

Engagements

Mr. Hirst asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 July.

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 July.

Mr. Strang asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 July.

Mr. Hardy asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 July.

Mr. Colvin asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 July.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 July.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 July.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 25 July.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentlemen and my hon. Friends to the reply that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. McKay).

Research and Development

Sir John Osborn asked the Prime Minister what has been the trend in total expenditure on research and development in the 1980s and in the 1970s, and as expressed as a percentage of gross domestic product; what it represents as a percentage of gross domestic product; and how this compares with the expenditure in other European and Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

The Prime Minister: The information requested for the United Kingdom is available only for years in which a survey of industrial research and development expenditure on science and technology is undertaken and is shown in the following tables.

Unemployment

Mr. Adley asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the policy of migration from the less to the more prosperous areas of the United Kingdom as a means of tackling unemployment and the implications of this policy on the planning processes of elected local authorities.

The Prime Minister: Regional industrial policy aims to reduce regional imbalances on a stable long-term basis, and to encourage indigenous potential within assisted areas. People may move from areas of persistently high unemployment to areas where employment prospects are better. The Government wish to facilitate greater geographical and occupational mobility by freeing markets, particularly in labour and housing, and by making the planning system more sensitive to changing needs. The planning system is the main vehicle for ensuring adequate provision for development to meet changing requirements. In preparing plans authorities are required to take account of guidance issued by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment, for example the strategic guidance which he has issued for the west midlands and south east regions.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister (1) whether there are any plans to improve or resite the Cabinet Office emergency centre;

(2) if she will list the total amount of (a) capital and (b) current expenditure incurred by the Cabinet Office for the purpose of planning transition to war activities, during the periods: 1951 to 1960, 1961 to 1970, 1971 to 1980 and 1981 to date, respectively;

(3) if she will list the total amount of (a) capital and (b) current expenditure incurred by the Cabinet Office for the purpose of planning and preparing for the maintenance of the machinery of government in war during the periods: 1951 to 1960, 1961 to 1970, 1971 to 1980 and 1981 to date, respectively.

The Prime Minister: In accordance with longstanding practice I am not prepared to disclose information on these matters, publication of which would not be in the public interest.

North Atlantic Treaty Organisation

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Prime Minister which Government Departments provide representatives to the planning boards of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation wartime civil agencies; who are currently appointed as United Kingdom representatives to these bodies and to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Civil Defence Planning Committee; and what is the cost of United Kingdom participation in such activities.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom is represented as follows:

NATO Agency	Government department	Number
Civil Aviation Planning Committee	Department of Transport	1 Official
Civil Communications Planning Committee	DTI	1 Official 1 non-Government employee
Civil Defence Committee	Home Office	1 Official
Food and Agriculture Planning Committee	MAFF	*1 Official

Planning Board for Ocean Shipping	Department of Transport	3 Officials *2 non-Government employees

* United Kingdom currently also provides the Chairman.

The cost to the United Kingdom of contributing to the work of these planning boards and committees cannot be separately identified.

Nuclear Non-Proliferation

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Prime Minister if she will list those occasions since 1 January on which she had the opportunity to raise the issue of nuclear non-proliferation and the nuclear non-proliferation treaty with foreign Governments or Heads of State.

The Prime Minister: Both Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers and I have raised nuclear non-proliferation with a wide range of countries. In particular, we have urged many of the countries which have yet to adhere to the non-proliferation treaty to become members.

X-Ray Laser Project

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Prime Minister if the United Kingdom intends taking part in collaborative research with the United States of America on the nuclear pulsed X-ray laser project within the strategic defence initiative.

The Prime Minister: The question of British participation in the strategic defence initiative research programme is still under consideration and no decisions have been taken.

Top Salaries

Mr. William Ross asked the Prime Minister if she will state the monthly increase of take-home salary for the categories of persons covered by the eighth report on top salaries at 1 April 1986 where the individual is married and receives only basic tax allowances.

The Prime Minister (pursuant to her reply, 24 July 1985): Using current tax rates and income bands and assuming the married man's tax allowance only, the average monthly increase in take-home pay comparing the rates of pay in force before 1 July 1985 with those which will apply from 1 March 1986 are estimated at :

for senior civil servants £157;
for senior Armed Forces officers £222;
for the judiciary £213.

WALES

Moorland

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the area of moorland in Wales which is predominantly heather; and if he will express this as a percentage of the total less-favoured area within Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information on which to base such an estimate is not readily available.

Rough Grazing

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the decline in area of freehold rough grazing between (a) 1955 and 1981 and (b) 1981 and 1984, in Wales in those parishes comprising the original less-favoured areas.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: This information is not available for less-favoured area parishes in 1955. In Wales as a whole rough grazing in sole occupation declined from 533,758 ha in 1955 to 356,742 ha in 1981. Details of sole occupation rough grazing in LFA parishes are available from 1980. This information is as follows:

Year	Area (ha)
1980	292,925
1981	300,899
1982	292,210
1983	291,027
1984	290,672

Water

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those water supplies in Wales which do not fulfil the requirements of the European Economic Community directive on drinking water, with regard to the levels of aluminium, iron, manganese and lead in such supplies.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The following supplies do not meet the requirements of the EC directive:

In respect of lead a regional delay until December 1989 is being sought from the European Commission under article 20 to enable the Welsh water authority to complete its remedial programme of works. At the commencement of the programme the authority identified that supplies serving some 600,000 people needed remedial work. Improvements to date have reduced this number substantially.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what response he has received from the Welsh water authority about the possibility of privatising the water industry in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A copy of the Welsh water authority's response has been placed in the Library of the House.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if, in view of the Gwynedd social services tribunal decision at Colwyn Bay on Friday 19 July, he will seek an urgent meeting with officers of Gwynedd county council to ascertain the implications of this decision on local government services in Welsh-speaking areas.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The decision of the industrial tribunal has no immediate impact on the delivery of services by the authority to any particular client group. There is provision for appeal and in view of this and the fact that written judgment is not yet available I cannot comment further on this issue.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will issue a circular to local authorities in Wales indicating for which jobs a knowledge of the Welsh language may be a condition of employment where, in the view of the authority, the jobs require regular contact with persons who may wish to communicate in the Welsh language.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No.

Health Technical Services

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has considered the future of the Welsh health technical services organisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Following the assumption of his duties last February I have appointed the director of the NHS in Wales to be chairman of the Welsh health technical services organisation from 1 April, and asked him to examine and report to me on the future of the organisation. The director has subsequently made a number of recommendations which I have approved. These are designed to strengthen the management of the organisation and make it more responsive to the needs of health authorities and the NHS generally in Wales. A general manager has been appointed from 1 July and constitutional changes affecting the name and status of the organisation and a reduction in the number of board members is provided for in the Welsh Health Common Services Authority Constitution Order 1985 which was laid before this House on 9 July and will come into effect on 1 August. (S.I., 1985—996).

Clwydian Range

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has yet reached a decision on the Clwydian Range Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty Designation Order made by the Countryside Commission on 7 June 1984.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I have today confirmed the Clwydian Range Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty Designation Order as submitted by the Countryside Commission. This proposal attracted the attention of a broad range of interests in and around the area and my decision was taken only after I had fully considered the representations made both for and against the designation and visited the area.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service

Mr. Dewar asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will give the number of non-legally qualified staff employed in the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service in 1983, 1984 and 1985, respectively.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The information is as follows:

	1983	1984	1985
Non-legally qualified staff in:
(a) Crown Office	67·0	81·0	78·0
(b) Procurator Fiscal Service	652·0	665·0	669·5

Note: The 1983 and 1984 figures are staff in post taken on 31 December each year. The 1985 figure is based on staff in post on 30 June.

Mr. Dewar asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will give the cost of operating the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service, respectively, in the financial years 1983-84 and 1984-85.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The total cost of operating the Crown Office and the Procurator Fiscal Service was as follows:

	Crown Office	Procurator Fiscal Service
1983-84	1,538,428	9,788,367
1984-85	1,693,249	10,793,129

Mr. Dewar asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will give the number of qualified solicitors employed by the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service in 1983, 1984 and 1985, respectively, and the salary costs of those employees in each of these years.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The following figures relate to solicitors and advocates as no distinction is made between the two branches of the profession in this context.

Number of qualified lawyers in Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service

	Numbers	Salary Costs
1983	223	3,699,864
1984	232	3,907,972

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many animals have been deliberately inflicted with shock at the Medical Research Council trauma unit, Manchester, over the last 10 years.

Mr. Brooke: I understand that the Medical Research Council trauma unit, which was established seven years ago, has used a total of 2,703 rats and 294 mice; no other species have been used. By no means have all these animals been subjected to the condition known as clinical shock, involving circulatory collapse. Experimental injuries are produced only in fully anaesthetised animals.

Mr. Leighton: asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the policy of the Medical Research Council with regard to the use of animals in experiments at its trauma unit in Manchester.

Mr. Brooke: The staff of the Medical Research Council's trauma unit, in common with all scientists supported by the council, are required to observe the principle that animals should be used in their research only when necessary, and in the minimum numbers consistent with achieving valid results in any experiment. The council also expects those whose work it supports to use, wherever possible, procedures which do not involve live animals. There are, however, many areas of medical research—of which the work of the trauma unit is an example — where, because of the need to study the complex interactions in a whole body, it is not possible to make progress without using experimental animals. In such cases research workers are required to carry out their work under licence from the Home Office, in strict accordance with the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876.

University Teachers

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed on 12 July, Official Report, column 539, whether, in formulating his answer, he took account of the fact that the settlement for university teachers in August 1980 completed the negotiations of university teachers' pay on the basis of 1 October 1979.

Sir Keith Joseph: Yes.

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish figures to show the percentage increases in university teachers' salaries in cash and real terms for each year from 1 October 1974 to the latest available figure.

Sir Keith Joseph: Set out below are the pay settlements awarded with effect from the dates shown:

	Pay settlements in cash terms Per cent.	Pay settlements in real terms Per cent.
1 October 1974	8·0	−7·7
1 October 1975	33·0	+5·7
1 October 1976	3·5	−9·8
1 October 1977	9·8	−3·7
1 October 1978	15·6	+7·2

* Consisted of a two-part Clegg-equivalent settlement—9 per cent. on 1 April 1980 plus 8 per cent. on 1 October 1980; together with 8·2 per cent. which was the first part of a two-part settlement extending over 18 months.

† Second part of the two-part settlement.

Undergraduate (Maintenance Grant)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science why the maintenance grant for a married undergraduate is assessed on the income of the student's parents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: For the assessment of a parental contribution to be waived a student must normally have reached the age of 25 years before starting his course, or have previously supported himself out of earnings for not less than three years. Married students not satisfying one of these conditions have their grant abated by a parental contribution, since marriage alone is not considered to signify the degree of financial independence which would make it unreasonable to expect such a contribution. Married students not assessed for a parental contribution may nonetheless have their grant abated by a spouse's contribution.

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, pursuant to his answer of 11 July, Official Report, columns 483-84, to the hon. Member for Leicester, East about teachers' salaries, he will publish comparable figures for head teachers' and deputy head teachers' salaries.

Sir Keith Joseph: There are currently 14 overlapping but separate pay scales for head teachers and 12 for deputy heads. In some years pay increases have applied differentially, and overall average percentage increases for heads and deputies are not readily available. The following tables give approximate percentage settlement increases for the head teacher group 5 and deputy head group 4 scales, and the estimated percentage increases in overall average salaries for all heads and deputies, in cash and in real terms, for the periods requested.

Notes:

1. Columns (1) and (3) relate to Group 5 headteachers (whose scale runs from £12,042 to £13,317) and to Group 4 deputy headteachers (£8,049 to £10,482) and give the cumulative increases from comparison of actual pay scales, where necessary taking the average of the increases at the minimum and maximum points. Column (1) is in cash terms. Column (3) is adjusted to reflect changes in the RPI during the periods in question.

2. Columns (2) and (4) give average salary increases for all heads and deputies derived from the Department's main mechanised record of teachers, as at 31 March each year adjusted for pay increases applicable (normally) from the following 1 April. Column (2) is in cash terms. Column (4) is adjusted to reflect RPI changes.

3. The estimated average salary figures reflect actual changes in salary levels arising from annual pay settlements ad incremental drift.

4. In extrapolating the figures to 1985 (row d), 5 per cent. has been taken as the settlement increase, and in addition the average salary figures assume a notional 0·3 per cent. for salary drift.

Power Electronics and Microprocessing Techniques

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether there is a shortage or a surplus of British graduates qualified in power electronics and microprocessing techniques, relative to the needs of industry; and what has been the shortage or surplus for each of the last five years.

Sir Keith Joseph: There is no precise way of defining the needs of industry for particular types of graduate engineer in areas relevant to the new technologies. However, the first report of the committee on IT skill shortages, chaired by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Department of Trade and Industry, my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South West (Mr. Butcher), concluded that the employment market could readily absorb a greater number of graduates from disciplines relevant to the new technologies. Significant increases in such disciplines are currently taking place through the Government's IT in higher education initiative and the engineering and technology programme.

Universities (Funding)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East of 24 June, Official Report, columns 310-11, whether he will list in the Official Report the percentage changes in the funding of each university by the University Grants Committee, excluding those amounts representing compensation for changes in home student fees, compensation for redundancy and early retirement, changes to take account of minor capital works from the recurrent grant and changes in the level of local authority rates; and if he will provide similar information for the period between 1980-81 and 1981-82 (a) including and (b) excluding these amounts.

Mr. Brooke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Academic Institutions (Clinical Medical Staff)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the implications of the National Health Service pay award for recruitment and remuneration of clinical medical staff in academic institutions.

Sir Keith Joseph: The implications of the NHS pay award for clinical academic staff in the medical schools are under consideration and I have at present nothing to add to the reply my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on 23 July 1985.

Higher Education (Green Paper)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science by when he now expects to receive comments on the Green Paper, "The Development of Higher Education into the 1990s," Cmnd. 9524.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland would be grateful if comments on the higher education Green Paper could be submitted by the end of January 1986. Comments may be sent to the following addresses:

Department of Education and Science, Room 5/11, Elizabeth House, London SE1 7PH.

Scottish Education Department, Room 3/114, New St. Andrew's House, Edinburgh EH1 3SY.

Mr. H. Evans, Welsh Office Education Department, Welsh Office, Cathays Park, Cardiff CF1 3NQ.

Department of Education for Northern Ireland, Room A6, Rathgael House, Balloo Road, Bangor, County Down, BT19 2PR.

Inner London Education Authority

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what expenditure level he proposes to set for the new Inner London education authority in respect of 1986-87.

Sir Keith Joseph: I propose to determine an expenditure level of £902 million for the new ILEA, which under the provisions of the Local Government Act 1985 will be automatically subject for three years to designation under part I of the Rates Act 1984. This sum represents a cash reduction of 1·5 per cent. on the budgeted total expenditure of the present ILEA in 1985-86 as adjusted. The adjustment allows for the new authority's responsibilities in respect of the Geffrye and Horniman museums, and also an estimate of the reduction in the authority's total expenditure which will result from my proposal to introduce a new contribution formula for the advanced further education pools. This adjustment will ensure that the ratepayers of Inner London receive the benefits of a new formula in the shape of a lower precept than they would otherwise have paid. In so far as ILEA's 1985-86 financial reserves are increased as a result of changing the formula this can of course be taken into account in setting the 1986-87 precept limit.

Notice of the expenditure level which I determine will be formally served on the interim ILEA as soon as it is constituted under the Local Government Act 1985. However, the present ILEA is being informed today of what I propose.

University Grants Committee

Mr. Tracey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is yet able to announce the form and terms of reference of the review of the University Grants Committee announced in the higher education Green Paper, Cmnd. 9524.

Sir Keith Joseph: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and I, as the two Ministers who are advised by the University Grants Committee, propose to establish a committee whose terms of reference will be:

"To review, within the context of expected developments in higher education, the University Grants Committee's constitutional position and role in relation to the Government and to the universities, its membership, its internal structure and working methods, and its secretariat."

Lord Croham has accepted our invitation to be the chairman of the committee. The members of the committee will be announced as soon as possible. The secretary of the committee will be Mr. Peter Syme of the Department of Education and Science. The committee is expected to start work in the autumn. The committee will seek evidence as it considers appropriate, but any individuals or organisation wishing to submit preliminary observations should send them to the secretary of the committee at the Department of Education and Science before 30 October 1985.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether he will list in the Official Report for the latest year for which figures are available (a) the maximum paid in respect of one school and (b) the average paid in respect of one school under the assisted places scheme represented by incidental expenses of (i) travel, (ii) uniform, (iii) meals and (iv) all three;

(2) whether he will list in the Official Report for the latest year for which figures are available the percentage of the average fee income to participating schools in respect of (a) assisted places pupils and (b) all pupils represented by the assistance with incidental expenses for travel, meals and uniform.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985, columns 349-350]: The information requested for the school year 1984-85 is as follows:

	£ Maximum paid to one school	£ Average paid to one school
Travel	9,469	1,354
Uniform	5,566	1,419
Meals	6,715	2,241
All Three	17,539	5,014

The average paid to one school in respect of travel, meals and uniform represents 3·9 per cent. of fee income from assisted pupils or 0·5 per cent. of that from all pupils.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether he will list in the Official Report for the latest year for which figures are available (a) the maximum paid in respect of one pupil, and (b) the average paid per pupil under the assisted places scheme for the incidental expenses of (i) travel, (ii) uniforms, and (iii) school meals and of (i), (ii) and (iii) together;

(2) whether he will list in the Official Report for the latest year for which figures are available the percentage of the average assistance with fees for a pupil under the assisted places scheme represented by the assistance with incidental expenses for travel, meals and uniform.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985, columns 349-350]: Information on payments for incidental expenses in respect of individual pupils is not collected by the Department. For the school year 1984-85, average payments per pupil were as follows:

	£ per pupil
Travel	29
Uniform	18
Meals	18
All Three	65

The total is equivalent to 4·8 per cent. of the tuition fee remission payments.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will list in the Official Report the percentage fee increase in each school participating in the assisted places scheme in each year since its introduction; and what are the increases for the next academic year.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985, c. 349-50]: The information requested is as follows:

Teachers' Salaries

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are current salary rates for all teaching grades employed by the Inner London Education Authority; for each grade, what is the inner London weighting allowance; if he will estimate the consequences of a 6·9 per cent. increase in salary rates, giving the revised pay scales; and if there are any proposals to increase the weighting allowance.

Sir Keith Joseph [pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1985]: Current salary scales for teachers in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools, operative from 1 April 1984, are set out in the Remuneration of Teachers (Primary and Secondary) (Amendment) Order 1984 (S.I., No. 1650) and apply nationally. The minima and maxima of the main scales are as follows:

	Scale 1	Scale 2	Scale 3	£ per annum Scale 4	Senior Teacher	Deputy Head*	Head Teacher
Minimum	5,442	6,252	7,734	9,201	9,915	6,807	9,573
Maximum	†9,201	9,597	11,031	12,363	13,395	16,689	22,941
Uprating these figures by 6·9 per cent. would give the following salary rates:
Minimum	5,817	6,683	8,268	9,836	10,599	7,277	10,234
Maximum	9,836	10,259	11,792	13,216	14,319	17,841	24,524

*There are 12 separate scales for deputy headteachers and 14 for headteachers. The figures given are the minima of the lowest and maxima of the highest scales.

†For good honours graduates. Maximum for other teachers is £8,556.

Inner London allowance is payable at the rate of £1,038 for all school teachers serving in the inner London area. No proposals have so far been tabled in the Burnham Committee for an increase in the London allowance for 1985.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Cumbria (Bribery and Corruption)

Mr. Franks asked the Attorney-General, if, in the light of the further information now made available to him, he will request the Director of Public Prosecutions to re-open the police inquiry into the allegations of attempted bribery referred to in the answer of 4 June, Official Report, column 113; and if he will request the Director of Public Prosecutions to seek the extension of the police inquiry to include other relevant matters.

The Attorney-General: I shall consider with the Director of Public Prosecutions the further information with which I have been provided and write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Franks asked the Attorney-General if he will request the Director of Public Prosecutions to seek a police inquiry into the circumstances referred to in planning committee minute No. 1134, of the South Lakeland district council, dated 27 November 1984, in the light of allegations of improper private gain by a third party arising from the breach of confidentiality mentioned in that minute.

The Attorney-General: This is a matter which, in the first instance, should be referred to the chief constable of the Cumbria police.

St. Olave's, St. Thomas's and St. John's United Charities

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Attorney-General whether he will request the Charity Commissioners to conduct an inquiry under section 6 of the Charities Act 1960 into the allegations of maladministration and conflict of professional and private interests concerning the St. Olave's, St. Thomas's and St. John's United Charities.

The Attorney-General: I understand that the trustees of the St. Olave's, St. Thomas's and St. John's United Charities are themselves investigating, through their auditors, certain allegations concerning the activities of one of the charity's officers. They will report to the charity commissioners the result of those inquiries and any action they propose to take in consequence. In these circumstances I do not think there are at present sufficient grounds to request the charity commissioners to conduct a formal inquiry under section 6 of the Charity Act 1960.

Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act 1984

Mr. Chapman asked the Attorney-General if he is satisfied that the requirement to give first consideration to the children of divorced parents is being met, following the implementation of the provisions of the Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act 1984.

The Attorney-General: Yes.

Mr. Chapman asked the Attorney-General how many maintenance orders have been made for fixed terms; how many have been terminated; and in how many cases both parties have been barred from making applications to the court since the provisions of the Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act 1984 came into operation.

The Attorney-General: The numbers of maintenance orders made for fixed term have only been available from the beginning of 1985. In the period from January to April of this year there were 6,115 such orders made (excluding those made at the principal registry) to benefit a spouse with or without a child.

The remainder of the information sought is not available without incurring disproportionate cost.

Mr. Chapman asked the Attorney-General how many clean break divorce applications have been granted since the provisions of the Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act 1984 came into operation.

The Attorney-General: This information is not available and could not be collected without disporportionate cost.

Mr. Chapman asked the Attorney-General in what ways the Lord Chancellor's Department is monitoring the effects of the Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act 1984.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor's Department is monitoring the effect of the Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act 1984 by the collection of statistical information from the county courts. The nature of the information collected was revised at the beginning of 1985 following the implementation of the Act.

Mr. Jock Kane

Mr. Foulkes asked the Attorney-General if he will now prosecute Mr. Jock Kane under the Official Secrets Act following the preparation by him of the manuscript for his proposed book "GCHQ: The Negative Asset"; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No decision has yet been taken on whether criminal proceedings should be instituted against Mr. Kane. Civil proceedings to restrain him from publishing the manuscript of the proposed book or any part of it are still pending and Mr. Kane stands restrained in the meantime by an interlocutory injunction to that effect.

Extended Detention

Mr. Lawrence asked the Attorney-General whether it is proposed that the Crown Prosecution Service should be responsible for making the applications for extended detention provided for by section 43 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

The Attorney-General: Although section 43 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 requires that such applications be made by a constable, it will sometimes be desirable for the officer to be legally represented. A requirement that the Crown Prosecution Service should undertake such applications would be inconsistent with its independent status and there will be no such requirement. But a crown prosecutor will have a discretion to provide legal representation for the making of such applications in cases where it appears appropriate to him to do so. My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary and I both hope that when it is considered to be desirable for an officer to be represented on an application under section 43, such representation will normally be provided by a crown prosecutor. Such representation will normally be provided by the crown prosecutor once the service is operating.

TRANSPORT

Transit Permits

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has made any representations to the French transport authorities seeking the introduction of special transit permits for heavy goods vehicles proceeding to other countries, particularly Spain and Italy; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: British hauliers need a permit to transit France under the provisions of the agreement concluded in 1969. The number of permits made available by the French authorities each year falls short of our requirements and we are pressing the French to remove the restrictions on both bilateral and transit traffic. We are also campaigning within the European Community for measures to liberalise international road haulage, in accordance with the recent judgment of the European Court of Justice.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to introduce a new shape for the heavy goods vehicle road tax disc to improve detection of tax avoidance.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I agree that a distinctive heavy goods vehicle tax disc would aid enforcement, and the Department is now considering the practical implications including costs. The views of the police will be sought shortly.

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to control the number of heavy goods vehicles entering the United Kingdom from other countries which restrict the number of British vehicles entering them; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Bilateral agreements with the majority of European countries provide for an annual quota of road haulage journeys in each direction, and any restrictions imposed on British vehicles are reciprocated. We shall continue to press for the removal of all such restrictions.

M3

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Transport why the current roadworks on the M3 at Sunbury have been necessary; when were they started; when they are expected to be completed; what will be the cost; how many reported accidents have occurred since the commencement of this work; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: This work is necessary to relieve pressure on the walls retaining the motorway embankments and to strengthen the carriageways through the junction. It began last August and is due to be completed in October this year, at an estimated cost of about £3 million. Since work started, one fatal and eight slight personal injury accidents have been reported.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the current public inquiry into the extension of the M3 motorway to be completed; and when he is likely to receive the inspector's report.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer to my hon. Friend to my reply on 22 July 1985.

Community Transport Services

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to reach a decision on the issue of consents for the existing and planned expansion of dial-a-ride and community transport services.

Mrs. Chalker: Consent under the Interim Provisions Act was given last October for the GLC to purchase £700,000 worth of vehicles for dial-a-ride schemes. The council's present application, for additional vehicles up to a value of £900,000, which would involve substantial leasing liabilities over a 5-year period, is under consideration.

Off-licences (Petrol Stations)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications for his drink-drive campaign of the incidence of petrol filling stations holding off-licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The number of garages actually holding liquor licences appears to be very small, but my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Home Department, and I are keeping a close watch on the situation. In doing so, we shall keep in mind the particular aspect to which my hon. Friend refers.

Hayes Bypass

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to reach a decision on the Greater London council's application to carry out noise insulation work in association with the construction of the Hayes bypass.

Mrs. Chalker: I am not certain what point the hon. Member has in mind. If he is referring to the application for consent under the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984 made by the GLC on 28 March, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment gave that consent on 13 May.

Light Vans

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate, for light vans and their derivatives, including minibuses and motor-caravans, but excluding car-derived vans, under 1·52 tonnes unladen weight (a) the number and severity of casualties in such vehicles for the last year where information is available, (b) seat belt wearing rates for front seat occupants in such vehicles, including wearing rates in accidents and (c) the crash-protection standards which apply to such vehicles other than those applying to front seat belts; and if he has any plans to introduce national regulations to improve the protection of occupants in such vehicles in the event of a collision.

Mrs. Chalker: (a) The number and severity of casualties of occupants of all types of light vans, including car—derived vans, for the last year figures are available (1983) was 102 killed, 1,447 seriously injured and 5,372 slightly injured. The majority of these casualties probably occurred in car — derived vans, but no separate information is collected. I will provide figures for minibuses and motor caravans as soon as possible.

(b) The seat belt wearing rates of front seat occupants of light vans, including car — derived vans, in 1983 were—drivers 81 per cent., passengers 83 per cent. The data for wearing rates in light van accidents are incomplete, but the indications are that they are probably similar. The wearing rates of front seat occupants of minibuses and motor caravans have not been seperately recorded.

(c) The crash protection requirements for cars do not apply to the great majority of the vehicles in question. However, some crash protection features might be usefully incorporated in the design of these vehicles, and I will consider what might be done.

Anti-lock Braking

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce national regulations requiring the mandatory fitment of anti-lock braking systems on motorcycles.

Mrs. Chalker: Anti-lock braking systems for motorcycles are still under development and must first be proved in service conditions. Trials are under way.

M25

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now give the expected opening dates of the M25, Reigate to Wisley sections, and all other remaining stages of the M25; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We expect to have the whole of the M25 open to traffic by the end of 1986. The actual opening dates of the remaining sections will depend on the progress made by individual contractors which in turn is influenced by weather and ground conditions.

The expected opening dates for these unfinished sections are as follows:

	Dates
Wisley-Leatherhead	August 1985
Leatherhead-Reigate	August 1985
Leatherhead Interchange	Partly open already but will come into full use August 1985
Poyle-M4	September 1985
M4-M40	September 1985
M4 Interchange	June 1986
Swanley-Sevenoaks	July 1986
Micklefield Green-Bedmond Road	October 1986
Bedmond Road-A405	October 1986
A405-The Bell (A6)	November 1986
The Bell-A1 (South Mimms)	November 1986

Seat Belts

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the Government's response to the road safety recommendations in the Transport Committee's report, and with particular respect to the fitting of rear seat belts and ways of encouraging the implementation of cost — effective small engineering schemes for accident reduction.

Mrs. Chalker: As regards rear seat belts I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel) on 24 July.

As regards cost—effective small engineering schemes for accident reduction, the Department takes every opportunity to encourage local authorities to maintain an active programme. It is, however, for individual authorities to decide their own priorities for expenditure.

Windscreens

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the proportion of heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles, respectively, which come on to the United Kingdom market fitted with high penetration resistance laminated windscreens.

Mrs. Chalker: We do not keep this information, but believe most HGVs and PSVs sold here have toughened glass windscreens.

Midland Links Motorway Viaducts

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the report will be completed on investigations into the Midland links motorway viaducts; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I have today placed the interim report on the concrete investigations of the Midland links viaducts in the Library of the House. It deals with the investigations to date and the remedial and protective measures which have been taken.

Nothing has so far emerged to call into question the structural integrity of the viaducts and no traffic restrictions are proposed on this account.

Nevertheless, the report recommends that further research should be carried out into the effects on reinforced concrete of water contaminated by de-icing salts. This will enable an evaluation to be made of the most effective long-term measures. The problems identified are not unique to these viaducts and the work to be undertaken over the next few years will be of benefit to other structures.

Urea was used as a de-icing agent on the Midland links last winter and its use will be continued this coming winter.

Passenger Transport Authorities

Mr. Brandon-Bravo asked the Secretary of State for Transport what expenditure levels he proposes to determine in respect of 1986-87 for the new passenger transport authorities.

Mr. Ridley: I expect to receive shortly the financial plans of the passenger transport executives which are submitted to me under the provisions of the Transport Act 1983. My advice under section 3(5) of that Act was issued to the PTEs in May this year, and I expect the plans to include projections based on that advice. Expenditure levels determined for the new authorities will need to take into account the best available information from the PTEs, and I do not therefore propose to announce figures until the new authorities are established.

EMPLOYMENT

Pollution

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what guidance is given to the factories inspectorate concerning the disclosure of information to the public following the investigation of alleged health risks;

(2) what guidance is given to the industrial air pollution inspectorate concerning the disclosure of information to the public following the investigation of alleged noxious emissions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The general requirements for, and restrictions on, the disclosure of information obtained by factory inspectors are contained in section 28 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. It is the factory inspectorate's practice to disclose as much information as possible to the public on specific investigations.

Labour Statistics

Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have registered as willing to work, giving details of their skill and experience, at jobcentres covering Mitcham and Morden at the most recent convenient date; and how many people were registered as unemployed for the purposes of benefit in the equivalent area at the same date.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 7 June 1985 there were 681 people registered for employment at jobcentres in the parliamentary constituency of Mitcham and Morden. This figure includes some employed people seeking a change of employment and some unemployed people not claiming benefits. Jobseekers are no longer required to register at a jobcentre as a condition of claiming unemployment benefit; nor is it necessary to register for employment in order to use the jobcentre.

The number of unemployed people claiming unemployment benefit, supplementary allowances or national insurance credits in Mitcham and Morden parliamentary constituency on 13 June was 3,557. It is a condition of receipt of these benefits or credits that a person be unemployed and capable and available for work.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures for the number of (a) lone parents, (b) heads of two-parent families and (c) married women in full-time employment, part-time employment, self-employed and unemployed.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest available estimates come from the 1984 labour force survey and are shown in the following table:

Persons aged 16 or over in Great Britain

(Thousands)

	Employees in full-time employment*	Employees in part-time employment*	Self-employed	*All in employment	Out of employment and seeking work†
Lone parents with dependent children‡	218	181	43	442	97
Heads of two-parent families, with dependent children‡	4,521	33	933	5,492	573
Married women‖	2,649	3,265	510	6,433	533

* The full-time/part-time classification is based on the description given by the survey respondents not the number of hours worked. The total in employment includes those who did not state whether they worked full or part-time and those whose employment status was not stated.

† Also includes those not seeking work because of temporary sickness or holiday or because they were waiting to start a new job or awaiting the results of job applications. Full-time students who satisfy these conditions but who are unavailable to start work because they must complete their education are excluded.

‡ Dependent children are those under 16, or those aged 16 to 18 still in full-time education.

‖ A small number in this group will also appear in the lone parent group.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest figures for the average weekly earnings of (a) women, (b) men, (c) lone mothers, (d) lone fathers, (e) heads of two-parent families, (f) married women with dependent children and (g) married women without dependent children, respectively.

Mr. Alan Clark: The most recent available information relating gross earnings to household composition and circumstances is that provided by the 1983 family expenditure survey and is set out as follows:

*Average gross normal weekly wages and salaries

For employees who are head of household
All men	170·3
All women	93·8
One women with children†	63·8
One man with children†	†152·6
One man, one women and one, two or three children†	181·2
For employees who are the wives of the head of household
Working with dependent children‡	55·6
Working without dependent children	81·4

Source: Family Expenditure Survey 1983‖

* Covering both full-time and part-time employment. Earnings from self-employment and households where no wages or salaries were received because the individuals were unemployed or unoccupied are omitted from these calculations.

† Based on relatively few households and subject to a substantial sampling margin of possible error.

‡ Persons who are under 18 years of age and unmarried are regarded as children in the survey.

‖ The figures relate to the calendar year and are based on a sample of about 7,000 households and will be subject to a margin of sampling and reporting uncertainty.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many doctors have been registered for unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit in the last three years.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 11 February 1985 at column 26.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the estimated number of additional workers in additional jobs created from the beginning of 1983 to the end of 1984 after making allowance for the additional number of second jobs and the additional number of places on temporary employment schemes.

Mr. Alan Clark: Between December 1982 and December 1984 the employed labour force in Great Britain increased by 553,000. It is estimated that over the same period the number of participants in special employment and training schemes included in the employed labour force reduced by 170,000. The second jobs included in the employees in employment estimates are not separately identified but estimates from the labour force surveys suggest an increase of 60,000 between spring 1983 and spring 1984 in the number of people with a second job as an employee.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of (a) men and (b) women registered as unemployed and under the age of 25 years in the London borough of Wandsworth on 30 June.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. Statistics of unemployment are not available for the date requested. On 11 April 1985, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age is available, there were 3,996 male and 2,177 female unemployed claimants under 25 years of age in the London borough of Wandsworth.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of (a) men and (b) women registered as unemployed in the London borough of Wandsworth on 30 June.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. Statistics of unemployment are not available for the date requested. On 13 June 1985 there were 11,539 and 4,820 unemployed male and female claimants respectively in the London borough of Wandsworth.

Finer Committee Report

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the latest position as regards the implementation by his Department of the recommendations which affect its responsibilities of the report of the Finer committee on one-parent families.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The recommendations of this committee on employment matters have been overtaken, since it reported in 1974, by the passage and implementation of equality and employment protection legislation, the work of the Equal Opportunities Commission, the establishment of the youth training scheme and the extension of adult training provision by the the Manpower Services Commission. In many areas rights and opportunities have advanced further than the committee envisaged in its recommendations.

Redundancies

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing redundancies for the period from May 1979 to date involving 10 or more persons as due to occur in Great Britain in each order of the Standard Industrial Classification.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The available information is given in the following table:

School Leavers

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many school leavers there were in (a) Hyndburn and (b) north-east Lancashire in 1984; how many (i) secured full-time employment, (ii) secured part-time employment, (iii) entered further or higher educational establishments, (iv) entered the youth training scheme, (v) returned to school and (vi) did not register for any other reason.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information which is available from the Lancashire careers service about pupils reaching minimum school leaving age in 1984 in Hyndburn and north-east Lancashire at 8 November 1984 is as follows:

	Hyndburn	North-east Lancashire‡
Number eligible to leave school	1,190	4,941
Number of known leavers	819	3,262
Entering employment*	291	1,041

* Careers Service records do not differentiate between those entering full and part-time employment.

† Careers Service records do not differentiate between those remaining at school and entering further and higher education.

‡ Consisting of Hyndburn, Burnley, Pendle, Rossendale.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many people entered the youth training scheme in (a) Hyndburn and (b) north-east Lancashire in 1984;

(2) what was the placement percentage of those completing the youth training scheme in (a) Hyndburn and (b) north-east Lancashire;

(3) how many people completed the youth training scheme in (a) Hyndburn and (b) north-east Lancashire in 1984.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested on numbers of young people who entered or completed youth training scheme programmes between January and December 1984 is given in the following table:

Hyndburn local authority district	North-east Lancashire
Entrants	450	3,999
Completions	136	1,504

Note:

North-east Lancashire covers the local authority districts of Blackburn Burnley, Hyndburn, Pendle, Ribble Valley and Rossendale.

I regret that information on the destinations of young people completing schemes is not available in the precise form requested. However, information based on a 15 per cent. sample of young people in the county of Lancashire who left the youth training scheme between July and September 1984 shows that, at the time of the survey, 63 per cent. were in work.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the youth training scheme in the Cheltenham area since its inception.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Progress on the youth training scheme in the Cheltenham area has been most encouraging. Some 1,500 entrants in the Cheltenham local authority district have benefited from the scheme so far. The undertaking that all minimum age school leavers remaining unemployed would be offered a suitable place on the scheme by Christmas has been effectively met in the first two years of the scheme.

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Employment what action he has taken to seek to ensure that local education authorities in England carry out their statutory obligations in respect of the youth training scheme and benefit.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have asked the head of the Department of Employment's careers service branch to write to all chief education officers in England to remind them that local education authorities are, by virtue of section 12(2) of the Employment and Training Act 1973, under a statutory obligation to give information to the unemployment benefit service on behalf of the Secretary of State concerning those youngsters who refuse a reasonable opportunity of receiving training on the youth training scheme. A copy of the letter which was sent on 11 July has been placed in the Library.

The letter refers to the fact that this information is required in connection with the determination of questions as to whether such youngsters should have their benefit temporarily reduced. The letter makes it clear that I am strongly of the view that this is a reasonable requirement on local education authorities which does not in any sense mean that the youth training scheme is "compulsory". Youngsters who, in the past, unreasonably refused jobs or "approved training" were similarly liable to have their benefit reduced: the designation of the youth training scheme as "approved training" is simply an extension of that long established principle.

Family Incomes

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are his latest estimates of average gross weekly earnings for the following, working age, family types: single man, single woman, man, wife and one child, man, wife and two children, man, wife and three children and lone mother and two children.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The most recent available information relating gross earnings to household composition is that provided by the 1983 family expenditure survey (published in December 1984) and is set out in the table. Figures from the family expenditure survey for 1984 will be available later this year.

Average gross weekly normal wages and salaries (£) for households where the head of household is an employee and aged over 15 but under 65 years*

Household composition†	£
One man	123·2
One woman	72·1
One man, one woman and one child	191·6
One man, one woman and two children	197·5
One man, one woman and three children	200·5
One woman and two or more children	56·9

Source: Family Expenditure Survey 1983.

* Households where the only earnings were from self-employment or where no wages or salaries were received because the individuals were unemployed or unoccupied were omitted from these calculations.

† Persons who are under 18 years of age and unmarried are classed as children in the survey.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1984 the weight given to expenditure on services and on transport and vehicles in the retail prices index at present compared with 1978, 1970 and 1956.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is as follows:

Retail Prices Index Expenditure Weights out of 1,000

	Services	Transport and vehicles
1956	58	68
1970	55	126
1978	56	140
1984	65	158

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report information showing the weight council house rents have in the retail prices index on the same basis as given in the answer of 1 December 1982, Official Report, columns 208-90.

Mr. Alan Clark: The weight attached to local authority rents in the retail price index for the current year is approximately 28 out of 1,000.

Domestic Gas Explosions (Fatalities)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have died in domestic gas explosions in Scotland in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is not available in the form requested. The following table shows the number of deaths in Scotland as a result of fires and/or explosions involving gas in domestic premises since 1977.

Year	Number of deaths
1978	0
1979	1

Careers Service

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Employment what guidance he has issued to local education authorities about their provision of a careers service; and whether he has any plans to alter it.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend's current general guidance to local education authorities about the careers service is given in a memorandum issued jointly with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales in November 1980.

I have asked officials to take urgent steps to bring the memorandum up to date. In particular, I see a need for greater emphasis on the importance of work with employers as a basis for sound, practical and realistic help to youngsters.

Putney Gas Explosion

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Employment when the report of the Health and Safety Executive on the Putney gas explosion will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 16 July 1985, c. 70]: The report by the Health and Safety Executive to the Health and Safety Commission of the investigation into the Putney explosion on 10 January 1985 at Newnham House, Manor Fields, Putney, is published today. I have placed a copy in the Library.

The investigation finds that gas escaped from a crack in the 150 mm grey cast iron gas main buried at the rear of the building. The crack was probably caused by a combination of stresses from heavy vehicles and ground subsidence acting upon the pipe which rested on the concrete encasement of a drain, which had the effect of concentrating the stresses at the point where the pipe cracked.

Although the number of serious gas explosions involving mains is small, the investigation indicates that the British Gas Corporation needs to re-examine its priorities for the replacement of grey cast iron mains, taking into account the factors which contributed to this tragedy. This re-examination will need to take into consideration the level of expenditure required for an adequate programme of replacement. When it is completed, the corporation will be expected to justify publicly its conclusions. This is the main recommendation of the report.

The report also recommends that action is taken at Manor Fields to replace the gas mains there and to reconstruct the roads to an adequate load-bearing standard.

Additionally, the HSE has commenced work on drawing up guidance to the construction industry on the safeguards required when working near cast iron gas mains. I am asking the HSC to follow up the recommendations made by HSE and to satisfy itself that they are implemented as soon as possible.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Deportation

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were recommended for deportation with no custodial sentence during 1984; and in how many cases the court released (a) subject to conditions and (b) without conditions.

Mr. Waddington: In 1984 there were 384 court recommendations for deportation with no custodial sentence; the court directed release subject to conditions in 101 cases and without conditions in 171.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of charges brought during the 1984-85 miners' strike have yet to be heard by the courts.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Drugs Legislation (Malaysia)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will study the laws in Malaysia relating to drug offences and their potential introduction into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Meller: The legislation relating to the misuse of drugs in Malaysia, like that in the United Kingdom, seeks to deal with the particular nature of the drug problem in that country and reflects the measures which are thought to be the best suited to that situation. We are kept informed of the drugs legislation of overseas countries, including Malaysia, and draw such lessons as seem appropriate.

Emergency Plans

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take to ensure that communities prepare and keep updated their emergency plans; and if he will consider what incentives he can offer.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Responsibility for making, reviewing and revising civil defence plans at community and other levels rests with county councils, assisted by district councils, and we have asked councils to complete their plans by the end of the year. The civil defence adviser to the Home Office has almost completed a programme of visits to all county councils in England and Wales to discuss the present state of civil defence planning and to offer advice.

Local authorities have already been informed that the Home Office is prepared to consider additional grant aid towards the cost of staff needed to prepare and revise their plans. In addition, central training is made available to community advisers and a package of standardised training material is in preparation for local use.

Military Chemical Weapons

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to take steps to inform the public of the properties of military chemical weapons and the protective measures he intends to introduce.

Mr. Giles Shaw: In the absence of a ban on chemical weapons we are considering the questions of detection and warning of chemical attacks and of protective measures against them. It is too early to say when this will be completed. Some information on the threat of chemical attack is already available in section 2 of the "Emergency Planning Guidance to Local Authorities", which local authorities have been asked to make available to the public; a copy is in the Library.

Attendance Centres

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many compulsory attendance centres have been established since 1983.

Mr. Mellor: Since 1 January 1983, seven new attendance centres have been established.

Miss Hilda Murrell

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further reports he has received from the chief constable of West Mercia on the progress of police inquiries into the murder of Miss Hilda Murrell.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The chief constable of West Mercia has kept my right hon. and learned Friend informed of continuing inquiries in this case. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to his question on 22 July at column 342 for the most recent information provided by the chief constable about progress in this case.

Commonwealth Immigrants (Funds)

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those circulars published by his Department between 1966 and 1985 regarding the Local Government Act 1966, section 11, entitled "Funding Regarding Commonwealth Immigrants".

Mr. Waddington: Four Home Office circulars have been published between 1966 and 1985 about section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966. They are listed as follows:

Home Office circular number	Date of issue	Title
15/1967	21 February 1967	"Commonwealth Immigrants"
169/1970	29 July 1970	"Commonwealth Immigrants"
97/1982	17 November 1982	"Section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966"
94/1985	30 August 1985	"Section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966—Review of Posts"

Race Relations Act 1965

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to review the working of the Race Relations Act 1965 with regard to its use to restrict recruiting of Welsh-speaking people to work in homes for elderly people or homes for mentally handicapped people in predominantly Welsh-speaking parts of Wales.

Mr. Waddington: No. I am aware of the hon. Member's concern about a particular case, but on present information, we are not persuaded that there is a need for any action on our part.

Vivisection

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been of universities and colleges for breaking the rules on vivisection.

Mr. Mellor: None. A summary of infringements of the 1876 Act and the conditions of licences issued under the Act and of the action taken in respect of these infringements is published annually in the "Statistics of Experiments on Living Animals Great Britain". For 1984 information is given in paragraphs 12 to 16 of Cmnd. 9574.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what arrangements are made for the Government to monitor the experiments on animals by drug companies;

(2) how many staff are employed in the monitoring of animals used for experiments by drug companies;

(3) how many drug companies have licences to carry out experiments on animals; and if he will list them.

Mr. Mellor: The 15 members of the Home Office cruelty to animals inspectorate carry out inspections of premises where medical, dental and veterinary drugs are developed and tested. They do so in precisely the same way as they inspect all other establishments registered with the Home Office under the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876 as places where experiments, likely to cause pain, may be carried out on live animals. Inspections are carried out mainly without prior notice, to ensure compliance with the 1876 Act and conditions attached to licences issued to individuals under the Act.

I regret that it is not possible to identify the premises registered under the 1876 Act which belong to drug companies, nor the number of licensees employed by such companies.

Law and Order

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total expenditure on law and order services in each year since 1979; and what the annual increases were in percentage terms, and in real terms.

Mr. Brittan: The information requested has been drawn from table 3.9 in volume II of the White Paper "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1985-86 to 1987-88" (Cmnd. 9428-II) and is set out in the table below. The figures are for the total law, order and protective services programme, excluding expenditure on protective services (immigration and citizenship, fire, community services, central and miscellaneous services and civil defence).

Cash expenditure (£ million)	2,103	2,607	3,095	3,445	3,792	4,183
Annual percentage increase		24·0	18·6	11·4	10·1	10·4
Expenditure in real terms† (£ million, 1979-80 prices)	2,103	2,297	2,570	2,469	2,599	2,746
Annual percentage increase		4·5	7·9	4·2	5·3	5·7

* 1984-85 figures represent provisional outturn.

Terrorism

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to take any action about the presence in Great Britain of Roberto Piaza and four other Italians who have been convicted of terrorist offences in Italy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brittan: At present I am not satisfied that the information currently available to me is sufficient to justify deportation, taking account of the requirements of the EC law. But I shall keep this aspect of these cases under review. If there was any indication of illegal activity in this country the police would certainly take appropriate action. It would be for the Italian authorities to apply for their extradition. All five were the subjects of unsuccessful applications for extradition in 1981.

There are deficiencies in our current extradition arrangements with Italy and we have entered into discussion with the Italian Government with a view to updating the list of offences for which extradition can be granted to include certain terrorist and drug offences.

Filling Stations (Off-licences)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet in a position to indicate whether he intends to introduce legislation to prohibit the issue of off-licences to operators of petrol filling stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The matter is currently under review; no decision has yet been reached on the need for legislation in this field.

Police Interviews

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement, in the light of the impending implementation of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985, on the availability of financial and manpower resources for the tape recording of interviews with suspects within the Metropolitan police area.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Field trials in the tape recording of police interviews with suspects are currently being conducted at Croydon and Holborn stations in the Metropolitan police district. Extension of the trials to Clapham, Holloway and the central cheque squad is planned for later this year.

Equipment for the trials at Croydon and Holborn was supplied by the Department. Other costs, including the costs of the equipment for the extension of the trials, are being met from the Metropolitan police's existing resources. The question of the future provision for expenditure on tape recording will be included in negotiations on the size of the Metropolitan police fund.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement as to the availability of funds for the implementation of the provisions of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985, particularly with reference to the tape recording of interviews with suspects at police stations; and if he has any plans to postpone any of the previously announced implementation dates on (a) financial or (b) other grounds.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Government have announced that funds will be made available to meet the costs thought likely to flow from the establishment of a duty solicitor scheme. So far as the tape recording of suspect interviews is concerned, it is not envisaged that this will lead to any increased resource requirement and could well lead to greater efficiency. Provision is being made in the Government plans for local authority capital expenditure of £1·4 million to cover the cost of minor works associated with the acoustic enhancement of interview rooms and on the purchase of equipment associated with tape recording in 1986-87. In addition the likely current expenditure involved will be reflected in the rate support settlement.

The administration of the Crown Prosecution Service will be the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General. Under the provisions of section 30 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 the costs of the service will be met from money provided by Parliament, and the necessary estimates will be laid before Parliament in due course. The Government's aim is to meet the implementation dates which have been announced.

Passport Office

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects the Passport Office to be fully computerised.

Mr. Waddington: Computerisation of the six passport issuing offices in the United Kingdom will, of necessity, be phased. We hope that full computerisation will be achieved by the end of the decade.

Firearms

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement regarding the legal implications of the territorial condition proposed by his recent working party in its report into the administration of the Firearms Act 1968.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Section 27(2) of the Firearms Act 1968 provides among other things that a firearm certificate shall specify the conditions subject to which it is held. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to his previous qestion on 27 June at column 455.

Television Licence Concessions

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many retirement pensioners receive television licence concessions in Portsmouth;

(2) how many retirement pensioners are currently receiving television licence concessions in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Giles Shaw: On 31 May 1985, about 600,000 persons in the United Kingdom benefited from the residential care concessionary television licence, of whom about 2,000 were within the Portsmouth postal code area. While the vast majority of these are retirement pensioners, a small proportion will be physically disabled or mentally disordered persons, but it is not possible from available records to identify the respective groups.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received concerning concessions for retirement pensioners' television licences.

Mr. Giles Shaw: About 290 hon. Members and 390 members of the public have written in the past 12 months about the concessionary licence scheme and concessionary licences for pensioners.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Government have any plans to extend television licence concessions for retirement pensioners in warden-controlled buildings to two-bedroomed flats.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We have no current plans to do so.

Police (Casualties)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were (a) murdered and (b) injured during shooting incidents with suspects in each of the last five years and in the current year to date within the Metropolitan police area.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The available information is given in the following table. Information for 1985 is not yet available.

Notifiable offences recorded by the police in which firearms were reported to have been used and police were victims*

Metropolitan Police District — Number of offences

	Offence currently recorded as homicide	*Offences when a policeman was injured

†Includes one case in which the policeman was off duty.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ensure that full consultation on the Metropolitan police force reorganisation takes place before any proposals are put into practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As my right hon. and learned Friend made clear in the debate on the Metropolitan police on 28 June column 1204) the basic principles of the reorganisation are now fixed; but within the new structure which has been announced many important questions remain to be decided. The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis is fully committed to wide consultation on the detailed development and application of the principles. As part of the continuing consultative process, he has recently sought views from over 170 bodies and individuals (including right hon. and hon. Members for constituencies within the Metropolitan police district) on a proposal to set up the eight new areas in September so that detailed discussions on a range of local issues can take place.

Prison Population

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the maximum capacity of each penal establishment in England and Wales and the number detained in each establishment at the latest date available;

(2) how many prisoners were detained in each penal establishment in England and Wales on 31 December 1984, 31 December 1983, 31 December 1982 and 31 December 1981.

Mr. Maller: My noble Friend will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of prisoners remanded in custody awaiting trial as of 30 June or the latest date available in England and Wales.

Mr. Meller: On 30 June 1985, about 8,300 untried prisoners were in prison department establishments in England and Wales. Information on how many were awaiting commencement of their trial is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of persons remanded in custody awaiting trial at the latest date available who have been remanded in custody for (a) more than three months, (b) more than six months, (c) more than nine months, (d) more than 12 months, (e) more than 15 months, (f) more than 18 months and (g) in excess of 18 months specifying the numbers, remand prison by remand prison.

Mr. Meller: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the recent increase in the prison population.

Mr. Brittan: The prison population increased by about 5,400 between the end of September 1984 and the end of June 1985. Seven hundred of that increase was in the remand population, the growth of which has, however, slackened in recent months. The remainder was in the population of sentenced prisoners and mainly amongst sentenced adults. Information on sentencing is not yet available for 1985, and a full analysis of the factors contributing to the increase cannot therefore be made. But our current assessment is that it has been mainly due to a larger number of defendants being dealt with by the Crown court and a larger proportion of them being given a custodial sentence. There was also evidence towards the end of 1984 of an increase in the length of custodial sentences being imposed by the Crown court for some types of offences, which may be a contributory factor. I intend to provide a fuller account of recent changes in the prison population in a statistical bulletin to be published in the autumn.

Prison Officers

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the number of prison officers currently engaged at each penal establishment in England and Wales at the latest date available;

(2) how many prison officers were engaged at each penal establishment in England and Wales on (a) 31 December 1984, (b) 31 December 1983, (c) 31 December 1982 and (d) 31 December 1981.

Mr. Meller: The number of prison officer grades employed at penal establishments in England and Wales on (a) 31 December 1984, (b) 31 December 1983, (c) 31 December 1982, (d) 31 December 1981 and 1 July 1985 is listed as follows:

Grendon Prison

Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the report of the advisory committee on the therapeutic regime at Grendon prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brittan: The committee's first report is published today and I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House. I welcome the report and accept the broad thrust of its proposals, in particular the central recommendation that Grendon should continue to concentrate in the main on group therapy, with the therapeutic community constituting the predominant form of therapy. The committee has also recommended that the arrangements for referral and induction of inmate patients should be improved, that the prison hospital should be reorganised and one floor converted to use as a small unit for the temporary care of inmates who suffer acute psychiatric breakdown elsewhere in the prison system; and that a research strategy and programme should be established with links with external academic departments. I have asked the Prison Department to consider how, and at what speed, the objectives of the committee can be met having regard in particular to their resouce implications.

Community Radio

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet in a position to make a further statement about an experiment in community radio.

Mr. Brittan: In reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on 11 July, at column 505, I said that I intended to make a further statement as soon as possible setting out the locations for some 20 experimental community radio stations, and outlining the application procedure for prospective licensees. After consulting my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry about frequency matters, I have decided that the locations for the experimental stations and the band on which frequencies will be allocated shall be as follows:

Location	Frequency band
Small Neighbourhood Stations
Dumfries	VHF
Rhondda	VHF
Wirral	VHF
Sunderland	VHF
Calderdale	VHF
Solihull	VHF
Rutland	VHF
Lincoln	MF
Colchester	VHF
Cambridge	VHF
Purbeck	VHF
Penzance	VHF
Aylesbury	VHF
London*	2 VHF, 1MF
Large Neighbourhood Stations
Shetland Isles	MF
North West Wales	MF
Community of Interest Stations
Greater Manchester	VHF
North London	MF
South London	VHF

* Three stations, with a broad geographical spread.

In the experimental phase it will not be possible to consider applications for community radio stations in any other locations than those set out above.

The broadcasting service radius for the small neighbourhood stations will be of the order of five kilometres. The larger neighbourhood stations will have a substantially higher radius. The community of interest stations will have a radius of about ten kilometres. The experiment will run for two years, and arrangements will be made for it to be monitored by way of studies of, for example, the nature of the services provided, audience reaction and the impact on existing local radio services.

Licences for community radio stations will be issued by the Home Office under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949, and it will be a condition of the licence that nothing should be broadcast which offends against good taste or decency or is likely to encourage or incite to crime or to lead to disorder or to be offensive to public feeling. Licences will not be issued to individuals or groups who have an interest in more than one station, to groups in which independent television or local radio companies have a majority interest, or to groups of which local authorities or political parties are part, joint or full owners. Licences will not be issued for any station which is primarily religious or political in character.

Community radio stations will be responsible for their own funding, by way of advertising, grants, private or commercial subscriptions or donations or any combinations of these. It will not, however, be possible to carry advertisements for those goods or services which may not be advertised on existing local radio services, and community stations will also be required as a condition of the licence to adhere to a code of advertising practice. I am considering how best to give effect to this. Neighbourhood stations, but not community of interest stations, will in addition be permitted to include sponsored programming, other than sponsorship by those concerned with goods or services which may not currently be advertised on radio.

Full details of these and other conditions, together with technical requirements, are outlined in notes for the guidance of prospective licensees, a copy of which I have placed in the Library. Further guidance on advertising will be sent to applicants when I have decided on the regulatory framework.

In accordance with the policy outlined in the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North on 11 July, the central criterion in considering applications will be that community radio should broaden the diversity of consumer choice by offering the community in question an additional service which is distinct in character, whether because of the nature of the programming, its emphasis on local or specialist interests, its appeal to specific community concerns or for other reasons. Applications which mirror the most popular programming elements of existing radio services are unlikely to be successful.

Copies of the notes for guidance for prospective licensees can be obtained from the Home Office Broadcasting Department. Applications should reach the Home Office by not later than 30 September 1985. In selecting the successful applicants, I hope to have the benefit of advice from a panel of advisers. Subject to the number of applications received, I hope to be able to announce the successful applicants in December.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what expenditure levels he proposes to set in respect of 1986-87 for the new joint police and fire and civil defence authorities in the metropolitan areas, and the London fire and civil defence authority.

Mr. Brittan: For these authorities, which under the Local Government Act 1985 will, for three years, be deemed to have been designated under section 2 of the Rates Act 1984, I propose to determine expenditure levels as follows:

	Police £ million
Greater Manchester	80·375
Merseyside	56·685
South Yorkshire	34·961
Northumbria	41·952
West Yorkshire	60·616
West Midlands	76·829

	Fire and Civil Defence £ million	These figures are comprised of Fire £ million	Civil Defence £ million
Greater Manchester	38·191	37·803	0·388
Merseyside	27·021	26·684	0·337
South Yorkshire	18·971	18·630	0·341
Tyne and Wear	19·556	19·220	0·336
West Yorkshire	29·347	28·949	0·398
West Midlands	36·060	35·598	0·462
London	141·505	140·804	0·701

The above figures are net of receipts and pension contributions and, for police and civil defence, of specific grant.

These proposals will be conveyed to chief executives of the Metropolitan districts and London boroughs, the Director-General of the Greater London council, chief executives of the Metropolitan counties and chief officers of Metropolitan county police forces and fire brigades and the London fire brigade together with further guidance on the establishment of the new joint authorities which I intend shall be issued next month.

Formal notice of the expenditure levels which I determine will be served on the new authorities when they are constituted. They will be advised at the same time of the procedure for applying for re-determination of the expenditure levels.

Drugs (Rapid Testing Equipment)

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the cost, reliability and availability of equipment designed to carry out rapid testing of compounds for possible content of heroin or cocaine; and what is his policy in regard to the provision of such equipment to assist the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 15 July 1985, c. 17]: Field kits of varying sophistication are available in this country. The simplest, which costs about £60, produces a colour reaction when a chemical is added to certain drugs and can be used to test for the presence of cannabis, amphetamine, LSD, cocaine, barbiturates and opiates (including heroin). These kits can indicate whether a controlled drug is present but the tests are not sufficiently reliable or specific to be used as evidence in a court of law. They are not used by the Metropolitan police: their provision would be a matter for the commissioner.

THE ARTS

National Museums (Directors)

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts whether the posts of directors of the national museums in England and Wales are graded mobile or non-mobile for the purpose of employment conditions.

Mr. Waldegrave: The directors of the OAL-funded national museums and galleries in England are not civil servants but are employees of the trustees of the museum or gallery concerned. Mobility under civil service conditions of employment does not therefore arise in these cases. Questions on the position of national museum directors elsewhere in the United Kingdom are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland as appropriate.

CIVIL SERVICE

First Division Association (Conference Resolutions)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Minister for the Civil Service what response he is making to the resolutions Nos 2, 6 and 9 agreed to at the annual conference of the First Division Association of Civil Servants about (a) Her Majesty's Government's handling of Government Communications Headquarters employees and (b) a code of ethics for civil servants, copies of which have been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have received no invitation from the First Division Association to respond to these resolutions. However, the head of the Home Civil Service met representatives of all the Civil Service trade unions on 23 July when I understand there was some discussion of the subject matter of resolutions 6 and 9.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Minister for the Civil Service how many registered disabled people were employed by each Government Department at 1 June; and, in each case, what percentage the number represents of the total number of employees.

Mr. Hayhoe: The numbers of registered disabled people employed by Government Departments are collected once a year, as at 1 June, and are normally available in September. For the most recent figures, as at 1 June 1984, I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris), 5 February 1985 at column 507.

Government Forms

Mr. Bellingham asked the Minister for the Civil Service what progress has been made on revising Government forms since April 1984.

Mr. Hayhoe: Cabinet Office (MPO) recently submitted a report summarising progress on the review of administrative forms to the Prime Minister and my right hon. and noble Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The report is published today and a copy has been placed in the Library.

The report shows that over 35,100 forms in national use were reviewed last year. Over 8,900 were improved and over 6,300 abolished. Standards of best practice in design and control of Government forms have been adopted which will guarantee progressively better forms in the future.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cereal Harvest

Mr. Gale asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to monitor the effects of straw and stubble burning following the current year's cereal harvest.

Mrs. Fenner: I shall be monitoring the position on straw and stubble burning by means of a weekly report during the harvest period from my Department's network of regional and divisional offices, supplemented when available by information collected by other Departments and organisations.

Eggs

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has yet received the report from Lord Peyton's review committee on the future of the Eggs Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: The report is now available and will be published today. Copies are available in the Vote Office and the Library. I am grateful to Lord Peyton and his colleagues for having so promptly completed their difficult task.

The committee's principal recommendation is that the authority should be dissolved, though not before the end of 1986—which it considers would give all sections of the industry an opportunity to evolve alternative arrangements for continuing those of the authority's functions which are thought to be necessary for the future.

My colleagues and I will now be inviting comments on the report and will reach conclusions on its recommendations in the light of those comments.

Meat Inspection

Mr. Leigh asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department has taken to improve the technical, financial and organisational aspects of the meat inspection service.

Mrs. Fenner: We set up in May 1984 a team consisting of Sir Peter Preston KCB (chairman), Mr. John Cross CBE and Mr. Charles Runge to look into the technical, financial and organisational aspects of red meat inspection in Great Britain.

The team's report was published on 14 May 1985 and interested parties have been invited to comment by 16 September. We shall decide on what action to take when we have fully considered the team's report together with any comments received.

Pigmeat

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total value of pigmeat products imported into the United Kingdom at the latest available date.

Mr. MacGregor: Imports of pigmeat products in 1984 had a total value of £580,357,000. Pigmeat products imported between January and May this year (the latest period for which statistics are available) had a total value of £228,246,000.

Livestock and Poultry

Mr. Leigh asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice his Department is giving to farmers about the treatment of livestock and poultry in hot weather.

Mrs. Fenner: I am aware of the problems that hot weather can bring for farm livestock and poultry. Each spring my Department issues a press release which draws farmers' attention to these problems and suggests ways to overcome them. I shall arrange for a copy of this year's press release to be placed in the Library of the House. Also during the summer, as part of their advisory role, members of the state veterinary service make arrangements to visit those premises considered to be at risk.

Sugar

Mr. Leigh asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with representatives of British Sugar on the potential for development of biotechnology using sugar as a raw material.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friend and I are in regular contact with the views of British Sugar and other interested parties on the potential for development of biotechnology using sugar as a raw material.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Leigh asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the process of notifying milk producers of their individual quotas for 1985-86 by the Milk Marketing Board has been completed.

Mr. MacGregor: The vast majority of producers in England and Wales were notified of their 1985-86 quotas in May. A very small number, generally involving complications such as land transfers, remain to be finalised.

Agricultural Support Expenditure

Mr. Shersby asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report for the period immediately prior to 1973 and currently, spending by Her Majesty's Government on agricultural support both gross and net of Community refunds, as appropriate; and if he will express the figures as a proportion of total Government expenditure.

Mr. Jopling: Expenditure on gricultural support in the United Kingdom, both gross and net of Community refunds, is set out in the table. Since we contribute to as well as draw from the Community budget any comparison with total public expenditure is best made gross of refunds from the Community.

*Expenditure on agricultural support in the United Kingdom

Mr. Shersby asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report for 1984, 1985 and estimates for 1986, in thousand million European currency units (a) total spending on agricultural market support for the Community as a whole (European agricultural guidance guarantee fund guarantee section) and on agricultural structures (European agricultural guidance guarantee fund guidance Section), (b) the split of spending on agricultural market support by commodity and other items as conventionally set out by the Commission, (c) the same figures but recast to treat commodity specific agricultural revenue consistently so that the dairy and sugar totals are both on a basis net of producer levies and (d) the total for spending on agricultural market support permitted for 1986 under the areement on financial disciplines; and how this total was calculated, giving the values of the main parameters in the calculations.

Mr. Jopling: The following table gives the information requested on EAGGF expenditure.

Badgers

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what instructions his Department's badger control teams are given about their rights to enter private land without the permission of the owner.

Mrs. Fenner: Where a badger investigation commences involving the taking and killing of badgers on land outside the statutory control areas of south-west England signed voluntary agreements must be obtained from the occupier before the teams enter on to the land. In control areas the teams have powers of compulsory entry on to land in respect of certain operations but wherever possible the occupier's co-operation and consent is obtained. The goodwill and co-operation of all landowners is essential and the teams are instructed to maintain this at all times.

Research and Development

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has received from the Priorities Board on future resource allocations for agricultural and food research and development.

Mr. Jopling: The Priorities Board is still considering its detailed advice on future resource allocations but, as an interim measure, it has agreed that the savings required in the publicly funded research and development programme in 1986-87 should be found through rationalisation of the existing programme and the removal of less effective areas of work. The board will be putting forward further detailed advice on future priorities and resource allocations in due course.

Ewe Meat

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food wheather he will make a statement on the future of the special export certification arrangements for ewe meat.

Mr. Jopling: In negotiations I have strongly opposed any idea that clawback might be chargeable on presentations of sheepmeat on which premium has not been paid. As part of the price-fixing agreement in May, the Commission undertook to make every effort to secure agreement between the member states concerned on the arrangements to apply beyond October. We have repeatedly urged the Commission to initiate the necessary discussions. I regret to say that the Commission has so far failed to follow up the commitment it gave. This is clearly unsatisfactory. I have written personally to Mr. Andriessen to express my concern and to underline the importance of avoiding any further delay.

Beam Trawling

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce new controls on beam trawling in so far as it affects smaller inshore fishermen, particularly in southern and south-western waters.

Mr. MacGregor: Beam trawling is a very effective method of catching flatfish. The increase in the beam trawling sector of the fleet in area VII in recent years has added to the difficulty of managing the Unted Kingdom quotas, particularly for sole and plaice, in this area and has led to suspension of directed fishing and in some cases premature closure of fisheries. In the light of consultations with the main industry organisations concerned Fisheries Ministers have now decided that action should be taken to prevent for the time being any further increase in beam trawling capacity in the area VII white fisheries.

Accordingly, after today and until further notice a licence for a beam trawler to fish for area VII whitefish pressure stocks will be granted only if the vessel is to replace an existing licensed beam trawler and if Fisheries Departments are satisfied that the catching capacity of this sector will not thereby be increased. The same rule will apply to vessels equipped for fishing for scallops or queens with a beam, as such vessels can have a significant impact on flatfish stocks. In addition steps will be taken through the licensing arrangements to prevent existing licensed vessels being converted to beam trawling. The detailed arrangements including the treatment of any special cases will be notified to the industry shortly.

These arrangements will be re-examined when the restrictive licensing arrangements as a whole are reviewed in the course of next year.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what bodies have recently been added to those against which complaints may be referred to the Northern Ireland Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration.

Mr. Hurd: None. The Northern Ireland Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration's jurisdiction covers the Northern Ireland Departments and the Civil Service Commission for Northern Ireland. Complaints against certain local and public bodies are a matter for the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints. I am considering the implications for these arrangements of the Government's proposal, set out in Cmnd. 9563, to extend the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration in Great Britain.

Housing Repairs

Mr. Clifford Forsythe asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what criteria are used in assessing whether requests for repairs by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive should be categorised as (a) essential or (b) non-essential; and at what level of qualifications such decisions are taken within the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 19 July 1985, c. 287-8]: This is a matter for the chairman of the Housing Executive who has advised me that district office staff are supplied with a list of typical repairs which indicates the category into which each item should normally be placed. This is a guideline only and the district office staff apply it with discretion in the light of their assessment of what is essential or non-essential in an individual case. Categorisation decisions are checked by district maintenance officers.

Mr. Clifford Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many of the category C repairs that have been reported in the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's Antrim district area are subject to a planned maintenance scheme; and how many such schemes have been initiated in this area in the last three years;

(2) how many of the category C repairs, that have been reported in the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's number 2 Newtownabbey district area are subject to a planned maintenance scheme; and how many such schemes have been initiated in this area in the last three years.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 19 July 1985, c. 287-8]: These are matters for the chairman of the Housing Executive who has advised me that the information is not readily available in the form requested and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost. The number of planned maintenance schemes initiated in the Antrim and Newtownabbey No. 2 districts in the last three years was as follows:

	Antrim	Newtownabbey No. 2
1982-83	12 schemes involving 1,530 dwellings	13 schemes involving 1,389 dwellings
1983-84	10 schemes involving 2,175 dwellings	9 schemes involving 1,666 dwellings
1984-85	31 schemes involving 4,304 dwellings	20 schemes involving 2,461 dwellings

Police Operations (Costs)

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary as to those processions involving bands in connection with the local government elections in May which took place in the local government districts of Londonderry, Limavady, Coleraine, Magherafelt, Cookstown and Strabane and which necessitated a police presence and as to the total cost of policing each procession; and whether the prescribed notice was received by the police in each case.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1985]: The Chief Constable regularly informs my right hon. Friend and me of law enforcement issues, including the conduct of parades and marches and the police resources involved.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of the police operation to stop the parade through the Gortalowry estate in Cookstown on 28 June.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1985]: Precise details are not readily available. However the cost of policing this parade has been estimated at £5,600.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Council of Ministers

Mr. Howard asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The usual written forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. No meetings of the Council are scheduled for August; three meetings are planned for September and six for October.

The Foreign Affairs Council is expected to meet on 16 and 17 September to discuss Commission proposals on global Mediterranean policy and the EC position on an EC/ASEAN ministerial meeting on economic matters in October. Follow-up to the Milan European Council will probably be discussed at this meeting.

An informal meeting of Social Affairs Ministers is due to take place on 16 and 17 September to discuss the flexibility of the labour market and the applications of equal treatment legislation to men and women.

The Agriculture Council is also due to meet on 16 and 17 September and may consider the revised proposals for changes to the starch regime, the labelling of sparkling wines and a new proposal for the review of the sugar regime.

The Budget Council is expected to meet on 17 and 18 September and will seek to establish the 1986 draft budget on the basis of the preliminary draft budget put forward by the Commission.

An informal meeting of ECOFIN Ministers is scheduled for 20 and 21 September. This will discuss preparation for the annual meeting of the IMF/IBRD; unitary taxation, and tax approximation.

Agriculture Ministers are expected to meet informally on 23 and 24 September and are expected to consider the Commission Green Paper on perspectives for the CAP. The Fisheries Council is not expected to meet in September.

Although dates for Council meetings in October have been agreed, it is not possible at this early stage to give details of the agendas for these meetings. Statements on the outcome of Council meetings in October will be made in the usual way.

Falkland Islands (Oil)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what discussions he has held with Firstland Oil concerning a possible offshore oil licence around the Falkland Islands; if he intends to communicate with Argentina regarding the licence; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list all representations and communications to his Department since January 1984 concerning the granting of licences for oil drilling on or around the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Renton: Firstland Oil and Gas plc has expressed interest in offshore exploration for hydrocarbons around the Falklands. The matter is currently under study. The same company was granted a licence for onshore oil prospecting in the Falklands on 19 July 1984.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with the Soviet Foreign Minister the issues of (a) the United Kingdom and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics' positions with regard to the non-proliferation treaty and (b) compliance by the United Kingdom and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics with the non-proliferation treaty article VI.

Mr. Luce: We have held regular consultations with the Soviet Union about nuclear non-proliferation, including the non-proliferation treaty. These have revealed a close identity of views between our two Governments about these important matters. It would not, however, be appropriate to disclose what my right hon. and learned Friend might wish to raise with the Soviet Foreign Minister.

Uranium

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department has received any information as to the use to be made by the Israeli Government of United Kingdom origin depleted uranium obtained via Luxembourg.

Mr. Luce: The Israeli authorities have told the International Atomic Energy Authority that the material was imported for non-nuclear non-explosive purposes and have permitted the agency to carry out an inspection.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the shipment to Israel from Luxembourg of United Kingdom-origin depleted uranium.

Mr. Luce: Export of the material to Luxembourg was authorised in accordance with the policy for nuclear exports laid down in 1976. That it was subsequently re-transferred to Israel is a matter for the Luxembourg Government in conjunction with the Euratom and IAEA safeguards authorities. The Israeli authorities have told the IAEA that the material was imported for non-nuclear, non-explosive purposes and have permitted the agency to carry out an inspection. Discussions in which we are playing an active role are underway within Euratom, to ensure a common interpretation of the safeguards regulations with regard to material transferred for non-nuclear use.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the British delegation to the non-proliferation treaty review conference will be presenting any proposals for the strengthening of safeguards following the shipment to Israel from Luxembourg of United Kingdom origin depleted uranium, outside safeguard provisions.

Mr. Luce: There is no intention at present to do so. The safeguards system was successful in detecting the anomaly.

Non-proliferation

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply of 3 May to the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Deakins), Official Report, column 258, if he will set out the dates of those occasions on which his Department has consulted the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on nuclear non-proliferation since December 1982.

Mr. Luce: It is not our practice to disclose details about confidential meetings with foreign Governments. However, these consultations have taken place several times each year during the period in question.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will state (a) the membership and (b) the remit, of the three committees that will be formed at the non-proliferation treaty third review conference.

Mr. Luce: Membership of the main committee is open to any state party. The distribution of work between them is dealt with by the final report of the preparatory committee, which states as follows:

Proposed allocation of items to the main committees of the conference

The Preparatory Committee agreed to recommend for consideration by the Review Conference the following allocation of items to the three Main Committees, with the understanding that the remaining items would be considered in the Plenary:

Remarks with regard to allocation of agenda items

It is understood that all articles, preambular paragraphs and agenda items allocated to the Main Committees shall be reviewed in their interrelationship. Main Committee I is entrusted with the task of assessing the extent to which obligations of Articles I, II and VI are being met.

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government intend to put forward any specific proposals at the third review conference of the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Luce: We are still considering the question of specific proposals at the non-proliferation treaty review conference. In the meantime I am arranging to have the United Kingdom's report about implementation of the treaty to which I referred in my answer to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Ashdown) on 24 July, placed in the Library of the House.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has considered the implications for the nuclear non-proliferation treaty of any British involvement in the strategic defence initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Our firm support for the strategic defence initiative research programme is fully consistent with out obligations under international agreements to which we are party, including the non-proliferation treaty (NPT). Our strong commitment to the NPT was stressed as recently as 15 July by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in her speech to the American Bar Association.

Helsinki Final Act

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the implementation by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and Eastern European countries of the provisions of the Helsinki final act during the last six months.

Mr. Luce: during the six-month period to 30 June 1985, implementation by the Soviet Union and Eastern European countries of their commitments under the Helsinki final act remained generally unsatisfactory although the pattern varied from country to country. In the Soviet Union, in particular, attitudes towards human rights and fundamental freedoms remained negative.

SECURITY IN EUROPE: PRINCIPLES GUIDING RELATIONS PARTICIPATING STATES: CONFIDENCE BUILDING MEASURES AND CERTAIN ASPECTS OF SECURITY AND DISARMAMENT (BASKET I).

PRINCIPLE VII, WHICH IS CONCERNED WITH RESPECT FOR HUMAN RIGHTS AND FUNDAMENTAL FREEDOMS, INCLUDING THE FREEDOM OF THOUGHT, CONSCIENCE, RELIGION OR BELIEF" CONTINUED TO VIOLATED BY ALL EASTERN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES. THE POSTURE OF THE SOVIET UNION AND THE WARSAW PACY COUNTRIES AT THE CSCE EXPERT MEETING ON HUMAN RIGHTS IN OTTAWA GAVE NO HOPE FOR ANY IMMEDIATE IMPROVEMENT IN THE HUMAN RIGHTS' PERFORMANCE OF THE COUNTRIES CONCERNED.

In the Soviet Union, repression of human rights' monitors and those active on behalf of religious or minority rights continued unabated. Particular pressure was put on unregistered religious sects, such as Baptists, Pentecostalists and, in the Ukraine, the banned Uniates. In March, Vasyl Kobryn, a leading member of the "initiative group for the defence of believers in the Ukraine" was sentenced to 3 years' labour camp on a charge of "disseminating anti-Soviet fabrications". Victor Walter, pastor of an unregistered Pentecostalist church in the far-east of the Soviet Union received a 5-year labour camp sentence in April; several other members of the church were also arrested and sentenced. A Lithuanian, Vladas Lapienis, was sentenced in March to 6 years in the camps and internal exile just before his 79th birthday while the following month a prominent Ukrainian activist, Mykola Horbal, received a sentence totalling 11 years.

Within the Jewish community there were a number of arrests and sentencing of teachers of Hebrew in what appears to be an attempt by the authorities to stop the spread of the Hebrew language in the Soviet Union. Pressures on refuseniks continued.

Action was also taken against various unofficial groups including the "Trust" group in Moscow and the Georgian "Phantom" group. The practice of resentencing political prisoners and the political abuse of psychiatry continued.

There was no sign of any significant improvement in the position of well-known individuals such as Anatoly Shcharansky or Andrei Sakharov. In early 1985, Dr. Sakharov announced that he would resign from the Soviet Academy of Sciences if his wife were not allowed to travel to the West for necessary medical treatment. Although it is not clear whether he carried out his threat to go on hunger strike, Dr. Sakharov's family believe that he did and that he might have been hospitalised as a result. At the end of June, the authorities released two films of Dr. Sakharov, allegedly taken in Gorky, which suggested that he was in poor health but receiving medical attention. There is, however, no means of checking the authenticity of the films.

In Bulgaria, the Government continued to respect Principles I to VI whilst overlooking the others. The period under review was dominated by reports of an intensification of the persecution of the ethnic Turkish minority in Bulgaria. According to the reports a campaign was launched at the end of 1984 to force ethnic Turks to adopt Bulgarian names. Evidence suggests that there was resistance in some areas and that this may have led to a large number of deaths. Repression of religious activity heightened during the review period.

Czechoslovak implementation of Principle VII continued to be unsatisfactory. This was illustrated by the use of "protective supervision" in the case of some released prisoners, and a series of arrests and trials resulting from government attempts to restrict religious practice. A positive development was the amnesty announced on 9 May which benefited a number of people sentenced for political offences.

In Poland, church-state relations remained poor in the wake of the murder of Father Popieluszko despite the Government's proclaimed desire for national reconciliation. Harassment and criticism of priests associated with the opposition continued. The number of political prisoners rapidly increased over the period and a tightening of the criminal code, made it easier to punish those taking part in demonstrations. In mid-February, the authorities broke up a meeting of several solidarity leaders in Gdansk and arrested three individuals: Bogdan Lis, Adam Michnik and Wladyslaw Frasyniuk. All three were later given sentences ranging from 2½ to 3½ years, subject to appeal.

In general, Romania and the GDR continued to pay scant regard to the humanitarian provisions of the Helsinki and Madrid documents. By contrast, despite one or two disturbing developments, Hungary's record on human rights remained comparatively good.

CONFIDENCE AND SECURITY-BUILDING MEASURES.

No observers were invited by the USSR or Czechoslovakia to a joint exercise held in May 1985 in Czechoslovakia. In mid-June, notice was given, with minimum details, of a joint Soviet/GDR exercise involving more than 25,000 troops to be held in July in the GDR. No observers were invited. Observers from certain countries (including smaller NATO countries) were, however, invited by the Soviet Union at the end of June to an exercise to be held from 13-21 July in the south of the USSR.

CO-OPERATION IN THE FIELD OF ECONOMICS, OF SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY AND OF THE ENVIRONMENT (BASKET II).

There were no major developments in this field over the period. There were, however, some encouraging signs of a renewed interest in expanding trade. Hungary and Poland still provided the easiest access to business contacts and to economic and commercial information.

CO-OPERATION IN HUMANITARIAN AND OTHER FIELDS (BASKET III).

With the exception of Hungary and Poland, Eastern European countries continued to take a restrictive attitude to family visits or reunification, and binational marriages. Emigration remained generally low although in the Soviet Union a slight increase in the permitted level of Jewish emigration was recorded in April 1985 but this increase was not sustained. In the first 4 months of the year, 5,800 people were allowed to leave the GDR legally to settle in the Federal Republic of Germany, fewer than in the corresponding period in 1984. Tourist travel outside Warsaw Pact countries remained very limited, again with the exception of Hungary and, to a lesser extent, Poland.

In the field of information, restrictions on access to Western sources of information continued as did jamming of several Western vernacular services (except in the GDR, Hungary and Romania).

CO-OPERATION AND EXCHANGES IN THE FIELD OF CULTURE.

Existing agreements and projects were generally implemented in a satisfactory manner. Bureaucratic and financial constraints were the main obstacles to the development of new programmes of exchanges and co-operation. For example, the Soviet Union failed to grant visas under the cultural agreement to enable British teachers to visit their students, and modest proposals on increased exchanges, which the British side made to the Romanians in February, were not taken up.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in respect of the Land Resources Development Centre, he will tabulate for each of the scientific disciplines the numbers of personnel employed who possess graduate or broadly equivalent professional qualifications, together with the number of vacancies in each discipline for which funded posts exist and the number of additional posts which will need to be filled for any future approved scheme of expansion, together with the corresponding figures for 1 April 1980.

Mr. Raison: Details of professional staff employed, and vacancies, at 1 April 1980 and 1 April 1985, are given in the following table. No expansion is planned for the centre.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what projects have been undertaken, or what direct assistance has been rendered by the Land Resources Development Centre in respect of areas now subject to famine in Africa in the course of the last five years; and in respect of each project or programme, what was the name of the commissioning body and the source of the funds for the payment of the work, together with particulars of any requests or proposals received from any quarter which have been declined over the same period, together with the dates concerned and reasons for the refusal of any request.

Refugees (Thailand)

Sir Patrick Wall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what financial help for medical supplies etc. has been given to refugees from Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos now in camps in Thailand in the last two years.

Mr. Raison: The Government have given humanitarian assistance to refugees in Thailand in the last two years as follows:

Sri Lanka

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what decision has been made on the Sri Lankan Government's request for British aid for the Samanala Wewa hydro-electric project.

Mr. Raison: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has informed President Jayewardene that, subject to our international reporting obligations, we are prepared to make a grant of £14·4 million from the aid and trade provision to be used in association with commercial credit. This is to support the British share of a bid by a consortium of British, French and Japanese firms to design and construct the project on the assumption that the Governments of France and Japan will give similar support.

Zambia

Mr. Maples asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what promises of aid were made by the United Kingdom to Zambia at the meeting of the World Bank consultative group held on 25 and 26 June.

Mr. Raison: We offered grants of £4 million programme aid, tied to British goods, and £10 million as the first pledge from the £75 million special joint financing we are giving to support the World Bank's African Facility. This £10 million will be untied and will be committed in conjunction with a parallel commitment from the Facility itself.

SCOTLAND

Deich Moss, Islay

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the area over which the proposed drainage works upon Deich Moss site of special scientific interest, Islay, will extend; and what additional area of the site will, according to best estimates, have its hydrology affected by these works.

Mr. Ancram: The area for which permission for the extraction of peat has been granted, and from which drainage is necessary before peat extraction can begin, extends to some 151 acres. However, phase 1 of the work is limited to 44 acres and my right hon. Friend has stipulated that no drainage of the remaining area covered by the permission may be carried out until at least 12 years after cutting operations in phase 1 have begun, and that before any drainage work for phase 2 is begun all the conditions relating to the method of operation should be reviewed by the planning authority in consultation with Scottish Malt Distillers Limited and the Nature Conservancy Council.

My right hon. Friend is not aware that any estimates have been made of the size or location of specific areas of Duich Moss where the hydrology might be affected by the operations for which planning permission has been granted. In granting planning permission, however, my right hon. Friend has noted that Scottish Malt Distillers Limited have indicated that they would have no objections to a hydrological survey being undertaken simultaneously with the extraction of peat from phase 1 of the operations.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he or the promoters undertook a full environmental impact assessment of the drainage and peat stripping proposal made by Scottish Malt Distillers over Duich Moss, Islay; and if alternative supplies of peat were fully explored and tested before the planning consent was granted.

Mr. Ancram: No formal environmental impact assessment of the proposal was submitted to my right hon. Friend with the planning application from Scottish Malt Distillers Limited to extract peat from Duich Moss. My right hon. Friend's decision to grant planning permission was based on the written submissions made to him. In reaching his decision, my right hon. Friend took account of the proposals for alternative sites suggested by the Nature Conservancy Council and of Scottish Malt Distillers' views of the necessity for extraction of peat from the site proposed.

Agricultural Research Institutes

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make it his policy in considering any organisational changes to the agriculture and food research service to preserve the integrated research and development structure of Scottish agricultural institutes and Scottish colleges of agriculture;

(2) if he will make it his policy to maintain the independent status of Scottish agricultural research institutes;

(3) if he will make it his policy, in considering the conclusions of the agriculture and food research service report, "A Long Term View", to maintain the links between research institutes and their governing bodies.

Mr. Younger: The replies to my Department's consultation paper on the strategy for agricultural research and development are currently being considered as are the replies to the Agricultural and Food Research Council's discussion paper "A Long Term View". It is therefore too soon to come to any firm conclusions about the future organisation of agricultural research and development in Scotland. There are however no proposals to alter the present arrangements under which I am responsible for the Scottish agricultural research institutes and for the Scottish agricultural colleges.

Edinburgh Dental Hospital

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting between the Scottish Home and Health Department, the university, the health board and the University Grants Committee on 23 July on the future of the Edinburgh dental hospital.

Mr. John MacKay: A very full and useful discussion took place on 23 July when new proposals for the future of the Edinburgh dental hospital and school were considered. It was accepted that revised proposal for the replacement of the existing dental hospital provide the basis for a more realistic and cost effective approach to the redevelopment of the dental hospital and school than previous studies. Lothian health board and Edinburgh university have agreed to develop the proposals further and thereafter submit them for consideration by the Secretary of State and the University Grants Committee.

Housing (Edinburgh)

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether immediate steps will be taken by Her Majesty's Government to provide Edinburgh district council with £5·6 million of funds in respect of housing as soon as the district council comes within the Secretary of State's guidelines relating to the rate fund contribution and adopts accepted budgeting procedures.

Mr. Ancram: I have still to study the details of Edinburgh district council's decision but, as I made clear in my written answer on 20 May 1985, at columns 291-2, once the council has revised its budget to bring the estimated rate fund contribution for 1985-86 down to the limit set by my right hon. Friend, the gross housing revenue account (HRA) capital allocation for this year, as abated for overspend in 1984-85, will be increased by £3·638 million from £11·440 million to £17·078 million.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when steps will be taken to allocate the £3 million as yet unallocated for defective housing in Scotland; approximately what percentage of this sum will be available for defective housing in Edinburgh; and when the authority will be informed of the precise allocation.

Mr. Ancram: My officials will be writing shortly to the appropriate local authorities requesting details of numbers of applications received under the provisions of the Housing Defects Act and estimated expenditure in the current financial year. When this information is available, supplementary allocations will be issued. It is not possible at this stage to estimate the supplementary allocation which a particular authority will require.

Housing Association Tenants (Purchasing Rights)

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether legislation will be introduced so that housing association tenants of general needs housing in Scotland are given the right to purchase their houses with a discount on the same basis as in England and Wales.

Mr. Ancram: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave him on 22 July 1985. The aim of the legislation which my right hon. Friend proposes to introduce will be to place housing association tenants in broadly the same position as other sector tenants in Scotland.

Children Act 1975

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his Department's consultations with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities concerning possible amendments to the Children Act 1975 to be proposed as amendments to the Law Reform (Parent and Child) (Scotland) Bill are proceeding satisfactorily.

Mr. Ancram: Yes. In response to a consultation document on implementation of the provisions in the Children Act 1975 dealing with the custody of children a number of bodies commented on the proposals for amendment to those provisions made by the Scottish Law Commission in its report on illegitimacy (Scot. Law Com. No. 82). These comments are being taken into account in our consideration of possible legislation based on the commission's general proposals.

Rate Relief

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when (a) the commercial ratepayers and (b) the domestic ratepayers will learn how and when selective rate relief will be received by those whose rateable value has increased by more than three times;

(2) what steps he is taking to publicise to (a) domestic and (b) non-domestic ratepayers the availability of special rates relief under the Rating (Revaluation Rebates) (Scotland) Act 1985; and whether he will make a statement as to the procedures to be adopted.

Mr. Ancram: The Rating (Revaluation Rebates) (Scotland) Act 1985 and the order implementing the revaluation rebates scheme come into force on 26 August. Around that time I shall be arranging for Scotland-wide publicity to be given to the scheme. As the order provides, however, no ratepayer need take any action initially to claim rebate. Rating authorities—regional and islands councils—will be comparing the old and new valuation rolls to identify ratepayers whose properties have had their rateable value increased by a multiplier greater than three, and which qualify for a rebate. By 16 September the authorities will write to all such ratepayers granting the rebates, either by making an appropriate payment or by reducing the amount of rates still to pay. By 23 September each rating authority will publish in a local newspaper a notice telling ratepayers that if they consider they might qualify for a rebate but seem to have been missed out, they should write in making a claim within 28 days. Only at this stage therefore is there a possibility that a ratepayer need take any action.

Rating authorities will have much to do in quite a short period to ensure that this timetable is met, and it would be very helpful if ratepayers who think they may be eligible but did not write in individually to their authority asking about the scheme. They should wait until either they are granted rebate or they see the authority's notice in the local newspaper.

Crofters (Glenelg)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library copies of the reports he received upon which he based his decision over the refusal of the issuing of a special licence to crofters at Glenelg under schedule 1 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1983.

Mr. Ancram: When an application is received for a licence to kill a bird listed in schedule 1 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1983 for the purposes of preventing serious damage to livestock, crops etc., my right hon. Friend makes appropriate inquiries into the probable cause, and the seriousness, of the damage and seeks advice also on conservation issues. The advice he receives on these various matters is not customarily made public; and I see no reason to depart from the normal practice in this case.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement detailing the communications he received on the merits or otherwise of granting a special licence to crofters at Glenelg under schedule 1 to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1983.

Mr. Ancram: Following a number of telephone calls and one letter regarding the issue of a licence, my right hon. Friend called for and received reports on the agricultural and conservation issues involved. Having considered these representations and reports, his decision was that a special licence should not be issued.

Museums (Directors)

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the posts of directors of the national museums in Scotland are graded mobile or non-mobile for the purpose of employment conditions.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The post of director of the royal Scottish museum is graded as mobile. The director of the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland is appointed by the board of trustees for that museum. All employees of the trustees are treated for all practical purposes (including pay and conditions of service) as if they are civil servants, and therefore the post of director is graded mobile.

Employment

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the estimated number of additional workers in jobs as employees created from the beginning of 1983 to the end of 1984 after making allowance for the additional number of second jobs and the additional number of places on temporary employment schemes.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Primary Schools (Rural Areas)

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many primary schools in rural areas have been closed since 1979.

Mr. Younger: There is no statutory categorisation of schools into rural and non-rural schools. All school closures reported to my Department between September 1982 and September 1984, the latest date for which this information is available, were included in the reply given by my hon. Friend, the Member for Eastwood on 11 July 1985 to the hon. Member for Dundee East at columns 521-2. I will write to the hon. Member about primary school closures before September 1982.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many teachers there are in primary schools in rural areas at the latest available date; and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Younger: This information is not held centrally. The most recent information on the overall numbers of teachers in education authority primary schools is contained in SED statistical bulletin No. 1/B1/1985. Copies of this and the earlier bulletins on the same subject are available in the Library.

Pupils (Hostel Stay)

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils in Scottish schools stay at hostels away from home; and how many of these are able to go home each weekend.

Mr. Younger: This information is not available centrally.

Job Creation

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs have been created in Scotland since January 1983; how many of them are self-employed; how many are part-time; and how many he estimates are in rural areas.

Mr. Younger: It is estimated that the employed labour force increased overall by 20,000 between December 1982 and March 1985; that, within that total figure, the numbers of employees in full-time employment declined by 45,000, the numbers of employees in part-time employment increased by 44,000 and the numbers of self-employed increased by 21,000. Estimates are not available for the numbers in rural areas.

Average Earnings

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest available figures for gross average earnings in Great Britain, in Scotland, and in rural Scotland.

Mr. Younger: The estimated average gross weekly earnings in April 1984 of full-time employees on adult rates were £159·30 in Great Britain, £155·70 in Scotland, and £159·50 in the area of the Borders, Dumfries and Galloway, Grampian, Highlands, Island Areas and Tayside local authorities, the Scottish Regions which cover most of rural Scotland. Estimates of gross average earnings are not available below regional level.

General Practitioners (Rural Areas)

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many general practitioners there are in rural practices in Scotland at the latest available date; and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Younger: The number of unrestricted general medical practitioners classified by health boards as working in rural practice was 339 at 1 October 1984. The equivalent figure, at the same date in 1979 was 316.

Hospital Beds (Rural Areas)

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many beds there are available in hospitals in rural areas in Scotland at the latest available date; and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Younger: This information is not readily available in the form requested, but I shall write to the hon. Member giving details of beds in the appropriate health board areas.

Public Sector Jobs

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many public sector jobs there are, at the latest available date in the rural areas of Scotland; and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Younger: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Telephone Exchanges (999 Service)

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many telephone exchanges in Scotland are used to provide the 999 service for rural areas.

Mr. Younger: Twenty-five.

Illegal Fishing (Prosecutions)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of prosecutions for illegal fishing in Scottish waters in each of the last five years; and if he will specify the counties involved and the number of convictions.

Mr. Younger: I shall write to the right hon. Member.

Police Questioning (Tape Recording)

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a statement about his proposals concerning the tape recording of police questioning.

Mr. Younger: I have just received the final report of the working party on the tape-recording of police interviews with suspects. The full working party report together with the report of the experimental study which was carried out in Scotland is now being printed and should be available in August. It would then be my aim to have a consultation period lasting until the end of the year. I shall make a further statement to the House in due course about the implications of the working party recommendations and the reactions to the consultative document.

Milk Outgoers Scheme

Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in reallocating quota purchased under the milk outgoers scheme in Scotland.

Mr. Younger: I intend to provide sufficient quota to reduce from 42·5 per cent. to 32·5 per cent. the cut applied to developer awards made by the Dairy Produce Quota Tribunal for Scotland. I also intend to allocate a small amount of quota to maintain quota levels in the Scottish islands and in Kintyre, south of Tarbert. Arrangements are in hand to inform developers and island producers of their new quotas for 1985-86.

Assistance for these two groups will take up some 5 million litres of the reserve, in addition to about 16 million litres already allocated to exceptional hardship cases and small producers and I shall announce as soon as possible my intentions in respect of the 9 million litres remaining in reserve.

I am concerned to protect the positionin those areas of Scotland where the level of quota is especially critical. In particular, all of the balance of quota surrendered by outgoers in the areas of the north of Scotland and Aberdeen and district milk marketing boards will be reallocated there.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a statement about the level of local authority expenditure provision for 1986-87.

Mr. Younger: I propose to increase the level of provision for local authority expenditure in Scotland in 1986-87 by £59 million above the figure published in the White Paper on the Government's Expenditure Plans (Cmnd. 9428). The total provision for relevant current expenditure for 1986-87 will now be £2,989 million. In making this addition I have taken into account the representations made to me by the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and I believe that the enhanced level of provision is a realistic target for Scottish local authorities.

The system of guidelines and grant penalties will continue to apply in order to maintain pressure to restrain expenditure. Since the additional provision I have made represents a significant step towards bridging the gap between my view and the view of the local authorities as to what should be spent, I trust that all authorities will now plan to remain within guidelines in 1986-87, thus avoiding the severe penalties which I will otherwise have to impose. The grant total and the guidelines will be announced in due course.

ENERGY

Uranium

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy when his Department discovered that United Kingdom origin depleted uranium had been sent from Luxembourg to Israel; and what steps he is taking to prevent such transfers in future.

Mr. Goodlad: The United Kingdom first learned in November 1984 of the diversion to Israel of depleted uranium originally exported to Luxembourg. The issues raised by this case are now under discussion within Euratom to ensure a common interpretation of the safeguards regulations with regard to material transferred for non-nuclear uses.

Civil Nuclear Facilities

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if agreement has been reached with the European Commission over article 36 of Commission regulation 3227/76 regarding the safeguarding of civil nuclear facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The definitions contained in article 36 of Commission regulation (Euratom) No. 3227/76 were drawn up after full consultation between the Commission and the member states. The United Kingdom was party to these consultations and accepts their use in the application of safeguards on civil nuclear facilities.

Diesel Fuel

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Energy what regulations, under zoning or other arrangements, exist in the United Kingdom for differential prices for diesel fuel.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: None.

Electricity

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Energy what response has been made to the report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the revenue collection systems of four area electricity boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I have received from the Electricity Council a single response to the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission published earlier this year on the revenue collection systems of the East Midlands, South Eastern, North Eastern and South Western area electricity boards. Copies of the response have been placed in the Library.

The commission concluded that none of the four boards it examined is pursuing a course of conduct against the public interest. Flowing from its central finding that there are significant variations between boards in the practices and procedures used for revenue collection, the MMC recommended that these differences should be systematically identified and analysed on an industry-wide basis to facilitate standardisation on best practice. The response indicates that this industry-wide exercise will be undertaken and that boards will continue their efforts to adopt beneficial standard practices. The industry has also recognised the desirability of greater consistency in the application of performance indicators to revenue collection.

The report covers a range of administrative issues relevant to all area boards; the assessment of and co-ordination of appropriate action on the recommendations is taking place. I hope that the council will be able to report substantive progress on a number of issues in the second response due early next year and I shall make a further statement then.

NCB (Enterprise) Ltd.

Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he plans to announce an increase in the resources available to the National Coal Board's enterprise subsidiary.

Mr. Peter Walker: I informed the House on 28 November 1984 that the financial provision for NCB (Enterprise) Limited would be kept under review. I am delighted to say that such has been the progress of this company that there is a need to double the allocation of funds to it. At a press conference to mark the creation of the first thousand jobs I shall today be making the following announcement:

It is only a few months ago that the Coal Board, with the financial support of the Government, created NCB (Enterprise). The objective was simple: to see that new jobs were created in mining areas where colliery closures took place.

For decades, under every form of Government, collieries have closed as the stocks of coal that could be economically extracted disappeared. But now for the first time the Coal Board have taken on the responsibility to see that they actively and energetically encourage new industries and new businesses to provide jobs where a pit has had to close.

The progress within a very few months has been remarkable. Already financial provision has been made to create over one thousand new jobs.

Already more than £1 million is being invested to convert redundant colliery buildings into workshops for new enterprises and new industries. A mass of enquiries has been received. They are currently being processed, and will result in much more money being needed in the coming months.

I anticipate that the £10 million originally allocated will be dedicated to job creation programmes over the coming months.

I am determined that this progress should continue. It is for this reason I am happy to announce today that, before the first £10 million has been allocated, a further £10 million is being made available.

An uneconomic pit with only a short time before its coal stocks are exhausted offers no future for a mining community. New businesses, new enterprises and new opportunities are what these communities require. That is why I have given the highest priority to the creative, exciting and constructive work of NCB (Enterprise). It is my hope that the second £10 million will be well spent and the mining communities can be assured that there will be no lack of financial, practical or political encouragement to the success of the Enterprise company. NCB (Enterprise) has done a marvellous job in a very short period of time, but it is only a beginning and nothing compared with the job that needs to be done and will be done.

South Wales Electricity Board (Report)

Mr. Grist asked the Secretary of State for Energy what response has been made by the South Wales Electricity Board to the report on the Board by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission which was published earlier in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to the reply, 29 November 1984, c. 537-38]: I have now received the second response of the South Wales Electricity Board (SWALEB) to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (MMC) report published in February 1984. This describes further progress by the board in meeting the commission's conclusions. I have placed copies of the board's response in the Library of the House.

The board has responded in a constructive and specific way to many of the MMC's recommendations and significant progress has been made since my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 29 November 1984 concerning SWALEB's initial response.

The commission recommended that board members should play a more active role in setting SWALEB's corporate strategy through the formulation of key medium term objectives, including cost reduction targets. I am pleased to note that board members are now fully involved in considering the board's central objectives and plans and that comparative performance indicators are studied as part of the planning process. It is clear from the response that SWALEB is committed to continuing progress in reducing its costs while maintaining acceptable standards of service—for example, a key objective in the current annual operating plan is to reduce the board's revenue expenditure by 3 per cent. in real terms compared with the outturn for 1984-85. I welcome the board's increasing use of quantified targets, including job-related indicators, which will play an important part in the continuing effort to enhance efficiency and value for money.

I am also pleased that in response to other recommendations the board is developing a comprehensive management information system related to the role and key objectives of each manager and that it continues to test the effectiveness and performance of its own labour force by regular comparisons between in-house and private contractors' costs over a wide range of work. I am glad to note SWALEB's success in eliminating losses in its appliance repair activity in 1984-85. I am discussing with the Electricity Council whether it might be appropriate for boards to adopt any new accounting arrangements for the repair business.

The commission commented (in conclusion 6) on the board's relations with the council. I attach considerable importance to the promotion of close working relationships within the industry, provided that these are cost-effective and give value for money. I am pleased to note that the Electricity Council has set up an audit group to monitor this aspect of central operations. The council is also taking action on a number of other recommendations with industry-wide implications, including the important areas of computer development and investment appraisal.

I should like to convey the Government's gratitude to the MMC for its thorough and stimulating investigation. Its findings have clearly been of considerable use to the South Wales board in helping it to increase efficiency and reduce costs.

ENVIRONMENT

Homeless Persons (Waltham Forest)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people have been accepted as homeless in the London borough of Waltham Forest in each year from 1979; and how many were priority cases.

Sir George Young: The following is the available information:

Number of accepted households

Year	Number
1979	467
1980	512
1981	535
1982	773
1983*	352

* First half.

About nine out of every ten accepted households were in priority-need. My Department does not collect information on the size of those households.

Reservoirs Act 1975

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what parts of the Reservoirs Act 1975 have still not been implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: The Reservoirs Act 1975 applies to large raised reservoirs and is being implemented in stages:

(i) enabling regulations and regulations for the appointment of the panels of engineers (required for various functions under the Act) came into force throughout Great Britain in 1984;

(ii) on 1 April 1985 throughout Great Britain (except the Greater London and English metropolitan areas, where it will be on 1 April 1986) provisions came into effect transferring responsibility for reservoir safety from district to county councils (providing for their setting up registers of reservoirs, taking action in event of an emergency and reporting to the Secretary of State about steps taken to ensure compliance with the Act); requiring owners to provide information about their reservoirs; and providing for non-compliance with the Act to be a criminal offence;

(iii) the remaining provisions, mainly concerning the supervision of reservoirs between inspections by qualified civil engineers, will come into force on 1 April 1986 (1 April 1987 in the Greater London and Metropolitan areas).

The Act replaces the Reservoirs (Safety Provisions) Act 1930, which already provides a strict regime for the inspection of large raised reservoirs and the supervision of their design and construction by qualified engineers appointed by the Secretary of State on the advice of the Institution of Civil Engineers. (Mine and quarry lagoons which are tips are covered by the Mines and Quarries (Tips) Act 1969 and are supervised by the Health and Safety Executive.)

Planning Zones (Green Belt)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, following the publication of the White Paper, "Lifting the Burden", he will make it his policy not to introduce simplified planning zones in green belt areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: The White Paper makes clear the Government's concern for the maintenance of the green belts. In those areas, existing development control policies will continue to apply and the proposals relating to simplified planning zones will not affect those policies.

One-parent Families (Finer Report)

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the latest position as regards the implementation by his Department of the recommendations which affect its responsibilities of the report of the Finer committee on one-parent families.

Mr. Gow: Most of the relevant recommendations of the Finer committee report were endorsed in DOE circular 78/77 or implemented by the Housing Act 1980. The Department's booklet "One Parent Families: Help with Housing", which was produced in 1978 in the light of the Finer committee's recommendations, has been substantially revised and updated; the new version will be published shortly.

UPVC Framed Windows

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards applications for listed building consent which have been refused solely because it is the policy of the planning authority not to allow UPVC framed windows in old buildings.

Mr. Gow: Guidelines to local planning authorities on alterations to listed buildings are contained in appendix IV and DOE circular 23/77. Each case must be considered on its merits. An applicant who has been refused consent has a right of appeal to my right hon. Friend.

Listed Buildings (Consent)

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether as a matter of policy each application for listed building consent for a private house listed as class 2 under the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 is considered individually as to whether the application affects the character of the building.

Mr. Gow: It is for the local planning authorities to decide how to determine such applications. My right hon. Friend would expect each application to be considered individually on its merits and as quickly as possible.

Live Animals (Ports of Entry)

Sir Humphrey Atkins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when action will be taken under the endangered species legislation to designate ports and airports for the entry of live animals.

Mr. Waldegrave: Regulations designating ports and airports for the entry of live animals have been made today. They will be laid before the House shortly. These regulations will fulfil a promise made by the Government during the passage of the Wildlife and Countryside Act in 1981. The regulations will help to implement the rules governing trade in endangered species more effectively, and have been made following extensive consultations with traders and conservation bodies.

Wild Animals (Migratory Species)

Dr. Twinn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to ratify the Bonn convention on the conservation of migratory species of wild animals.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government attaches great importance to the protection of threatened wildlife and I am therefore very pleased to be able to announce that the United Kingdom ratified this important convention earlier this week. We now look forward to playing a full part in the first meeting of the contracting parties to be held in Bonn in October.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total number of permanent staff directly employed by the London Docklands development corporation as at 31 March 1982, 31 March 1983, 31 March 1984 and 31 March 1985.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 22 July 1985.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what steps the London Docklands development corporation has taken to provide guidance to developers on provisions for disabled people in public buildings as required by the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 and the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 as amended by the Disabled Persons Act 1981;

(2) how many (a) privately owned [illegible] and (b) publicly owned or housing association units on London Docklands development corporation-owned land have been designed for people with disabilities; and what is the London Docklands development corporation target number for such dwellings on London Docklands development corporation-owned land;

(3) how many women have obtained new jobs in the London Docklands development corporation area; what industries these women are employed in; and what percentage of total new jobs it represents;

(4) what steps the London Docklands development corporation has taken to seek to ensure that new leisure facilities in the London Docklands development corporation areas are designed to give access for the disabled and elderly; and what steps are being taken to provide sports and leisure facilities that are suited to the specific requirements of the disabled and elderly;

(5) how many construction jobs in the London Docklands development corporation area have been taken (a) by women and (b) by people from the black and ethnic minority communities;

(6) what provision the London Docklands development corporation has made of roads and pavements in their area for people with impaired mobility, wheelchair users, and pedestrians with aural and visual impairments;

(7) if the London Docklands development corporation keeps a register which indicates the number of members of black and other ethnic minority communities employed;

(8) pursuant to his reply of 29 April, Official Report, columns 31-32, if he will list the individual development initiatives for the royal docks being discussed by the London Docklands development corporation.

Sir George Young: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Inter-action of any of its subsidiaries is receiving either capital or revenue funding from the London Docklands Development Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: No.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps the London Docklands Development Corporation has taken to ensure that the design of houses on London docklands development-owned land contains provisions for the disabled.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: Provision for the disabled on sites released to private developers is a matter for the prospective purchasors and builder to negotiate. Provision is made for disabled accommodation, to wheelchair and mobility standards, for local authority and housing association developments on corporation-owned land.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps the London Docklands Development Corporation intends to take to ensure that the composition of private housing estates on London Docklands Development Corporation-owned land reflects the multicultural nature of London.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: None.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what training programmes are used within the London Docklands Development Corporation to create awareness of racism and sexism.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: None. The corporation do meet all statutory requirements in respect of equal opportunities, as it relates to selection, promotion, training and termination.

Privatisation

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the findings of the latest privatisation survey conducted and published by the Local Government Chronicle, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I share my hon. Friend's disappointment at the survey's findings that so few authorities have recently seen fit to seek the savings which private sector competition can so clearly offer.

Sport (Greater London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional funds he proposes to make available for sporting schemes in the Greater London area.

Mr. Macfarlane: I shall answer this question shortly.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in how many planning appeals during the last 12 months he has not accepted the inspector's recommendations; how many of these involved proposals for (a) residential developments and (b) more than 300 residential units.

Mr. Macfarlane: I shall answer this question shortly.

Departmental Vote

Mr. Watson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if any changes will be made to the cash limits on his Department's Votes for 1985-86.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The cash limit on Class XIV, Vote 1 relating to expenditure by the Property Services Agency on Civil Accommodation Services will be reduced by £12,222,000 from £606,516,000 to £594,294,000. This is to compensate for an overspend of £12,222,000 in 1984-85 and follows the standard practice whereby an excess over the cash limit in one year is deducted from the cash limit in the next year. The excess occurred because rent and other receipts proved to have been overestimated and work progressed faster than expected so that offsetting shortfalls in gross expenditure did not materialise on the scale forecast. The agency is reviewing its forecasting and monitoring methods, particularly where receipts are concerned, in order to improve its cash limit control.

Water Supply (Norman Shaw South)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the report on the contamination of the water supply in the Norman Shaw South building has been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: In my statement to the House on 6 June, I said that I had ordered a full investigation into the matter, and that I would publish the report. I also assured the House that the lessons learnt from this unfortunate incident will be vigorously pursued.

The investigation was carried out by Mr. M. J. Dudding, a Principal in the Parliamentary Works Office, assisted at relevant times by one of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Factories of the Health and Safety Executive, a member of the staff of the Serjeant at Arms' Department or a safety officer of the Property Services Agency's London region. His report has been completed and a copy has today been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Copies have also been sent to the appropriate trade unions and staff associations; and to all occupants of the Norman Shaw south building.

I am satisfied that Mr. Dudding's investigation has been detailed, thorough and impartial. His report was prepared in full consultation with the authorities of the two Houses, and with the Health and Safety Executive. Each of these bodies has expressed itself satisfied with the investigation and the findings of the report.

The investigation has established that anti-corrosion chemicals were accidentally poured into the wrong tank in Norman Shaw south on two occasions, on 4 May 1985 and 4 June 1985. The report reveals weaknesses in the management of the Parliamentary Works Office, and in communications within both that office and the Serjeant at Arms' Department, and between these two bodies.

The main recommendations are that:

(a) improvements should be made in the Parliamentary Works Office relating to records and instructions to staff;

(b) in both the Parliamentary Works Office and the Serjeant at Arms' Department formal training should be given so that all staff understand the relevant procedures, and can pass on and record messages accurately;

(c) the Parliamentary Works Office and the Serjeant at Arms' Department (together with Black Rod's Office in the House of Lords) should jointly consider ways in which communications could be passed through defined focal points in each body, and should redraft the material about services in the two Houses which is made available to Peers, Members and their staff to include reference to building services and the channel for dealing with complaints;

(d) chemical dosing equipment, which would obviate the need to pour chemicals into the water tank, should be fitted to the Norman Shaw south boilers as a matter of urgency.

I accept these recommendations as far as the Parliamentary Works Office is concerned, and I shall be in touch with my right hon. Friends the Lord Privy Seal and the Lord President of the Council about those recommendations which relate to the Serjeant at Arms' Department and the Black Rod's Office respectively.

The following measures have already been taken in Norman Shaw south:

(a) chemical dosing equipment for the boilers has been ordered, and will be fitted as soon as possible;

(b) all down-service supply tanks have been clearly marked as such;

(c) all taps marked "Drinking Water" have been checked to ensure that they are supplied from a rising main, and all drinking water taps have been clearly marked;

(d) all tanks are being numbered, and instructions have been issued that the number and description of the appropriate tank is to be quoted on the order form when a tank is to be dosed; and also that the Technical Officer must show the operative which tank is concerned and explain what is required;

(e) permanent labels marked "Not for drinking" are being made to taps at wash basins which are not supplied directly from a rising main.

Similar measures are also being implemented in other Parliamentary buildings. Additional drinking water taps are being installed during the recess in Norman Shaw south. Management and control procedures in the Parliamentary Works Office will be urgently reviewed in the light of both this report and a district management review of the office which was carried out in May as part of PSA's planned programme of checks to ensure the proper maintenance of the estate and the effectiveness of its district works offices.

The question of possible disciplinary action against any of the PSA's staff concerned in this case, which is a matter for the agency's management, is being considered in the light of the report.

I can assure you that the recommendations of this report will be vigorously pursued.

Building Regulations

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what will be the role of certificates issued by the British Board of Agrément when new building regulations are made under the Building Act 1984.

Mr. Gow: The certificates will have an enhanced role in the new building control system. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will agree with the board the aspects of performance which it needs to assess in preparing its certificates in order that the board may demonstrate the compliance of a product or system, which has an agrément certificate, with the regulations. An agrément certificate, issued by the board will give assurance that a product or system to which the certificate relates, if properly used in accordance with the terms of the certificate, will meet the relevant requirements. A statement to this effect will be included in each of the approved documents to be issued by my right hon. Friend as guidance to meeting the requirements of the regulations.

A statement to this effect will be included in each of the approved documents to be issued by my right hon. Friend as guidance to meeting the requirements of the regulations.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Expenditure and Savings

18. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer which are the main areas of spending which have been increased in real terms; and which are the main areas where savings have been made since 1979.

26. Mr. Yeo asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state those areas of public expenditure which have been increased and those which have been cut, since 1979.

Mr. Peter Rees: Since 1979-80 the main areas where we have increased spending in real terms are law and order, social security, defence, and the health service. The main areas when reductions have been achieved are public sector housing, support for the nationalised industries, excluding the effects of the coal strike, our contributions to the European Community; and in Civil Service numbers.

Demergers

19. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to seek to amend the provisions of the Finance Acts in so far as they affect fiscal matters relating to demergers.

Mr. Hayhoe: No.

Inflation

20. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of inflation.

Mr. Lawson: Over the 12 months to June 1985, the retail prices index increased by 7 per cent.

Income Tax

21. Mr. Penhaligon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the proportion of the population which currently pays less income tax in real terms than in 1978-79.

Mr. Hayhoe: Over 99 per cent. of taxpayers will pay less income tax in 1985-86 than under a 1978-79 indexed tax regime.

46. Mr. Chope asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the burden of income tax in the United Kingdom on those with below average earnings compares with the United Kingdom's principal European competitors.

Mr. Moore: The table below gives the position for average, three quarters average and half average earnings for the United Kingdom, France, Germany and Italy.

	United Kingdom	France	Germany	Italy
Income tax as percentage of average earnings
Single person	22	9	20	16
Married couple	17	3	12	15
Income tax as percentage of three-quarters of average earnings
Single person	19	6	15	13
Married couple	13	1	10	10
Income tax as percentage of half average earnings
Single person	14	3	11	7
Married couple	4	1	6	4

Notes:

1. The figures given relate to the average production worker's wage in each country (estimated as at 1 April 1985), as that is the only average earnings figure available for all the countries shown.
2. The tax data used are for 1985-86 for the United Kingdom, 1985 for Germany and Italy, and 1984 for France (which will not set its tax rates for 1985 until the end of the year). The figures take account of personal reliefs, minimum deductions for expenses and other standard reliefs.
3. The income of the married couple is assumed to belong wholly to the husband.

Infrastructure (Investment)

22. Mr. Strang asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last had discussions at the National Economic Development Council about the level of public investment in Britain's infrastructure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Rees: The NEDC had a lengthy discussion on the public sector built infrastructure on 10 July.

Direct and Indirect Taxation

23. Mr. Home Robertson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the levels of direct and indirect taxation in 1979 and at the present time.

Mr. Hayhoe: Direct taxes, including North sea taxes, were £28½ billion in 1978-79, and the Budget forecast for 1985-86 is £69½ billion. Indirect taxes were £30 billion in 1978-79, and the Budget forecast for 1985-86 is £68½ billion.

Johnson Matthey Bankers

24. Mr. Nellist asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will meet the Governor of the Bank of England further to discuss the position of the Johnson Matthey bank.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today to the hon. Members for Liverpool, Mossley Hill and Bolsover.

34. Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if any disciplinary proceedings have been taken against Bank of England staff following the Johnson Matthey Bankers collapse.

Mr. Ian Stewart: This is a matter for the Governor of the Bank of England.

£1 Notes and Coins

25. Mr. Janner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many £1 notes and £1 coins, respectively, are now in circulation.

Mr. Ian Stewart: About 235 million notes and 505 million coins.

Capital Transfer Tax (Conservation Land)

27. Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will now extend the scope of capital transfer tax relief for areas of land which are set aside to be managed to an agreed plan for conservation purposes.

Mr. Peter Rees: In this year's Finance Bill we have extended the scope of capital transfer tax exemption for amenity land supporting a historic house. I have no present plans to extend that or similar exemptions further.

Economic Recovery

28. Mr. Knox asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether there have been any further signs that the economy is recovering from the recession.

35. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent evidence he has had of economic recovery.

Mr. Peter Rees: In the three months to May, the average level of the index of industrial production rose by 3 per cent. from the level of the previous three months to stand at a level 4½ per cent. higher than a year ago. In the second quarter of this year retail sales rose by 2 per cent. and were 4½ per cent. higher than a year ago. All the indications are that we are now entering the fifth year of increased economic activity — the longest period of continuous growth since the 1973 oil crisis.

Commercial Bills

29. Mr. Eggar asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, when he next meets the Governor of the Bank of England, he will discuss with him the value of commercial bills owned by the bank.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend regularly meets the Governor to discuss financial developments in the context of the medium-term financial strategy. I am sure he will have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion.

Privatisation

30. Mr. Corbyn asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on the public sector borrowing requirement of the Government's privatisation proposals over the next two years.

Mr. Peter Rees: Forecasts of the proceeds from the special sales of assets programme will be published in the Autumn Statement and the next Public Expenditure White Paper.

Gross Domestic Product

31. Mr. Spencer asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present level of gross domestic product compared with 12 months ago.

Mr. Peter Rees: After allowing for the effects of the coal strike, GDP grew by an underlying 3½ per cent. between the first quarters of 1984 and 1985.

Interest Rates

32. Mr. Dykes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will hold discussions with the Bank of England with a view to reducing interest rates.

45. Mr. Bruce asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Gentleman to the reply given earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow.

Mr. Pike asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he now proposes to take any steps to reduce interest rates.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Harlow.

P11D Tax Threshold

33. Mr. Colvin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about the current level of the P11D tax threshold; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: A total of eight representations from employers and employees about the current level of the P11D threshold have been received since 6 April 1985. I draw my hon. Friend's attention to my remarks about the threshold in the report stage debate on the Finance Bill (Official Report, c. 954-5).

Scotch Whisky Industry (Stock Relief)

36. Mr. Sims asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Scotch whisky industry on the impact of the withdrawal of stock relief; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: We have received a number of representations and in both his Budgets my right hon. Friend has reduced the real level of the duty on whisky.

Monetary Policy

37. Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he proposes any changes in the operation of his monetary policy.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Policy will continue to be operated in the way set out in the Budget statement within the context of the medium term financial strategy.

Tax Inspectors (Performance-Related Bonus)

38. Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if tax inspectors of principal grade conducting investigations and agreements of the accounts of small limited companies will qualify for payments under the performance-related bonus scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: All tax inspectors at principal grade level, whatever their duties, are eligible for payments under the performance bonus scheme.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the average cost of replacement of a trained inspector of taxes leaving by resignation, including (a) cost of recruitment of his replacement, (b) cost of training his replacement and (c) loss of tax yield whilst his replacement completes training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The cost of replacement will depend on a number of factors. The cost of recruitment varies between about £15,000 for a graduate direct entrant to well under £1,000 for staff selected internally for inspector training. The cost of training, depending on the type of training involved, is estimated from about £20,000 to about £40,000.

It is not possible to give an estimate of the average loss of tax yield involved since this is likely to vary widely from case to case depending on the type of activity on which the resigning inspector has been engaged and whether the vacancy created is in fact carried, pending replacement, in the same or a different area of activity.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will describe the duration and cost of training an inspector of taxes.

Mr. Moore: For a fully trained inspector, the full course of training lasts three years followed by five separate weeks of management and supplementary technical training spread over the next two years. The cost of this training (including salary and overhead costs for non-effective time) is estimated at about £40,000. For other Inspectors, the initial training lasts 13 months. They can then be nominated for management training (two weeks) and supplementary technical training equivalent to about five weeks spread over six months. The cost of this training on the same basis is estimated at about £20,000.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual cost-yield ratio for a typical inspector of taxes engaged in investigative work.

Mr. Moore: An inspector of taxes engaged on accounts investigation work can be expected to produce in extra revenue five times his total cost.

Job Creation (Tax Cuts)

39. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received about the advisability of tax cuts as a method of creating jobs.

Mr. Peter Rees: This is a topic often raised in communications received by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Money Supply

40. Mr. Straw asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent consideration he has given to changes in methods of controlling the money supply.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Such matters are subject to constant review.

Employment

41. Dr. Twinn asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the growth in employment in the United Kingdom since June 1983 compares with the record of major European countries.

Mr. Peter Rees: Since June 1983, United Kingdom employment has risen by 615,000. By contrast, total employment in the rest of the European Community has fallen over this period.

Silver Coins

42. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the relationship between size and value of the existing silver coins.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I assume my hon. Friend is referring to the four cupro-nickel coins currently in circulation. The 10p coin weighs twice the weight of the 5p coin. The weight of the heptagonal 50p coin is three times that of the heptagonal 20p coin. There is no size/value relationship between the round and heptagonal cupro-nickel coins. Exact relationships between size and weight and value are no longer needed because banks and other major cash handlers now use coin counting equipment to count coins instead of weighing them.

£M3

43. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to develop additional measures to M3 of the money supply.

Mr. Ian Stewart: £M3 is not the only available measure of the money supply. The Government has targets for MO and £M3, and statistics are published for a number of other definitions of money. There are no plans to develop further measures.

48. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of M3.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The growth of sterling M3 remains hard to interpret. The over-subscription for Abbey Life has distorted this month's figures. The surge in investment financing to take advantage of the higher capital allowances available in 1984-85 is still unwinding. Part of recent £M3 growth may also be the result of structural changes in the financial sector which do not carry adverse implications for future inflation.

Unemployment Costs

44. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current annual cost to the Exchequer, taking into account lost taxes and benefits paid, of the present level of unemployment.

Mr. Peter Rees: The current annual cost to the Exchequer of benefits to the unemployed is £6·23 billion. It is not possible to estimate the revenue forgone.

Financial Management Initiative

47. Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied with the effectiveness of the financial management initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The financial management initiative has successfully stimulated better financial management and greater efficiency in government departments. Work continues in each department, as it takes forward its plans, as a key part of the overall programme to improve the efficiency of public services.

Public Spending Targets

49. Mr. Boyes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he still expects that the public spending targets contained in the "Autumn Statement" will be met.

Mr. Peter Rees: The 1984 "Autumn Statement" summarised the Government's public expenditure plans for 1985-86, and these were later detailed in Cmnd. 9428. The public expenditure planning total for that year was subsequently increased at the time of the Budget to £134·2 billion by the addition of £2 billion to the Reserve. I consider this total to be realistic.

Small New Businesses

50. Mr. Fallon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will now make it his policy to relieve new small businesses of national insurance contributions.

Mr. Peter Rees: The Social Security Bill 1985 sets out the rates of national insurance contributions that will apply from 6 October 1985. The reduced rates for employers' contributions in respect of lower paid employees should encourage employment in new firms as well as old.

Cider (Excise Duty)

51. Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what revenue arose from excise duty on cider in the year 1984-85; and what he expects to accrue in the year 1985-86.

Mr. Hayhoe: About £45 million and £60 million respectively.

National Economic Development Office

52. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has recently received from the National Economic Development Office on public spending.

Mr. Peter Rees: The National Economic Development Office prepares papers for the Council as a whole on a range of subjects. The office paper on infrastructure for the July meeting of NEDC drew out the major issues arising from the papers submitted. It pointed out that the TUC advocated a net increase in public expenditure of £30 billion for infrastructural investment spread over five years, while the CBI called for no net increase in public expenditure, but for savings on current expenditure to be used to finance additional capital expenditure of up to £1 billion per annum, with further increases financed through better use of Government resources.

53. Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the recent meeting with the National Economic Development council.

Mr. Peter Rees: The council discussed a progress report from the Director-General on the new jobs exercise, and papers on the public sector infrastructure. The council agreed to reissue the papers.

Value Added Tax

54. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the building trade about the value added tax registration level.

Mr. Hayhoe: Four since the last Budget, all recommending a reduction or abolition of the threshold.

Tax Reform

55. Mr. Ancram asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to publish his proposals for tax reform.

Mr. Moore: Later this year.

Taxation Yield

Mr. Arnold asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the ratio of the yield from direct taxation to the yield from indirect taxation in each year since May 1979.

Mr. Moore: The ratio of the yield of taxes on personal sector income to taxes on consumer spending is given in the table. Estimates of the yields of these taxes in 1984 will be published in the 1985 edition of the CSO Blue Book in September.

Taxes on personal income: taxes on consumer spending

Sterling Rate

Mr. Knox asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what percentage (a) sterling M3, (b) M1 and (c) M3 rose in the 12-month periods to the beginning of each month since April 1984.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The figures requested by the hon. Member for June 1984 to June 1985 were published using revised seasonal adjustments in the Bank of England's following figures press release on 18 July 1985. The following table provides the information for April and May 1984 on the same basis.

Foreign Borrowing

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the outstanding public sector foreign borrowing in total by year of repayment.

Inland Revenue (Performance Bonus Scheme)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the rules under which Inland Revenue staff can receive awards under the performance bonus scheme; if he will detail the amounts available to each grade of staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: I am arranging to place in the House of Commons Library a copy of a statement setting out details of the performance bonus scheme as it is being operated in the Inland Revenue in 1985-86.

The amounts of a bonus award for 1985-86 for individuals in each eligible grade of staff are as follows:

£1,100 for Grades 3, 4 and 5

£950 for Grade 6

£700 for Principal and equivalent grades.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Dalyell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in future public expenditure White Papers, he will identify in a separate programme all public expenditure relating to the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Peter Rees: I have no plans to do so.

Taxation

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer further to his reply to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) Official Report, 2 July, columns 112-15, if he will now publish similar figures relating to income tax and national insurance contributions; and if he will show total taxes as a percentage of gross earnings in each case.

Mr. Moore: The information is in the table.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the United States of America and the United Kingdom the change in the incidence of (a) direct and (b) indirect taxation since 1979 for a person on average earnings so far as this can be calculated.

Mr. Moore: [pursuant to his reply, 18 July 1985, c. 257]: The figures in the following table give a comparison of (a) income tax and social security contributions; (b) indirect tax payments as a percentage of gross earnings of an average production worker (APW) using the OECD's definition. The tax figures are calculated for a married man with a non-earning wife and two children who earns the APW average. Indirect tax payments (excluding LA rates) are given only for the United Kingdom APW. These are based on a typical expenditure pattern for this earnings level, derived from the family expenditure survey. Equivalent information for the United States is not readily available.

(Per cent. of gross earnings)	United States (California)	United Kingdom

1985 (United Kingdom 1985-86)
(a) Income tax and employees' social security contributions	17	26
(b) Indirect taxes	n/a	13

Notes:

1. As comparable figures for all occupations, average earnings are not available, the comparison has been made instead on the basis of the earnings of an APW as published by OECD. The 1979 earnings figures refer to males only whereas the 1985 figures refer to men and women because of a change in the OECD series. The 1985 figures are derived by updating the published OECD figures for 1983.
2. Personal reliefs, employment income reliefs and other standard reliefs have been taken into account.
3. It is assumed that the United Kingdom employee is not contracted out from the State pension scheme.
4. The figures for the United States of America include local income taxes at 1984 rates. The 1985 rate is not fixed until the autumn.
5. If child benefits were deducted from the United Kingdom's income tax and social security contributions, the percentages would be:

1979-80	17

There are no child benefits or analogous payments in the United States of America.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the years 1973-74, 1978-79 and the current financial year, at a full year rate, the percentage of gross income taken in (a) direct taxes, including national insurance contributions less child benefit and (b) indirect taxation, in the case of a married man with two children, one earner and no other allowances where the earnings of the married man are (i) 45 per cent., (ii) 60 per cent., (iii) 100 per cent., (iv) 200 per cent. and (v) 300 per cent. of average earnings; and if he will provide comparable figures for single persons.

Mr. Moore: [pursuant to his reply, 18 July 1985, c. 257]: The available information is in the table. Indirect tax payments cannot reliably be estimated below about 75 per cent. or above about 150 per cent. of average earnings. Estimates of indirect tax payments in 1973-74 are not readily available.

Notes:

1. Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. The figure for 1985-86 is illustrative and assumes growth of 7 per cent. over the provisional 1984-85 outturn.
2. Direct taxes include income tax and national insurance contributions, less child benefit or family allowance; indirect taxes exclude rates but include the indirect effects of taxes levied on businesses.
3. The estimates of indirect tax payments are derived from the 1983 Family Expenditure Survey.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the estimated taxable values in the current financial year of benefits to taxation under special taxation rules under the different headings together with the real values in each case.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 18 July 1985, c. 258]: Provisional estimates, for 1985-86, of the taxable values of benefits subject to taxation under special rules are as follows:

	£ million
Company cars and car fuel available for private use	1,050
Accommodation	15
Vouchers, including luncheon vouchers	30
Cheap or interest-free loans	40
Private medical insurance	50

The taxable values of vouchers and private medical insurance are based on the cost to the employer of providing the benefits.

The remaining benefits are charged to tax on a conventional basis and I regret that information is not available on which to base a reliable estimate of their value on another basis.

Imports and Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the income effect of a 1 per cent. increase in gross domestic product in real terms on the volume of imports and exports of manufactures.

Mr. Peter Rees: The effects would depend on the source and composition of the increase in GDP.

Civil Service (Pay)

Mr. Favell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what, in cash terms and in real terms, the gross pay and the take-home pay was of a Civil Service permanent secretary with a £30,000 mortgage and two children of school age on 1 July 1979, on 1 July 1982 and will be with effect from 1 July 1985.

Mr. Hayhoe: The figures given in the table are annual rates based on the salary applying at 1 July for each of the years in question.

† Using annual average values of the Retail Prices Index except for the figures for 1 July 1985 which have been deflated by the increase in the RPI in the first six months of 1985 compared to the corresponding period in 1984.

Excise Duty

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy regarding differentials between levels of excise duty on beer, light still wines, sparkling wines, medium strength wines, high strength wines and spirits.

Mr. Hayhoe: This is one of a number of factors that my right hon. Friend takes into account when deciding on the levels at which to set these duties in his Budget. Where the duties on beer and table wine are concerned, the differential is of course constrained by European Community law.

Mr. George Gardiner asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total excise duty charged on spirits in the year ended 31 March; what was the total excise duty received; and what reasons account for any difference.

Mr. Hayhoe: Customs and Excise do not maintain a central record of accrued liability to duty, but estimate, on the basis of quantities of spirits cleared for consumption in the year to 31 March 1985, that the duty charged was of the order of £1,430 million. The provisional out-turn for 1984-85 (that is, duty received) is £1,238·83 million. The figures are not identical because duty payment is deferred by an average of one month. Much of the difference is attributable to distortions of revenue flows in March and April, due primarily to Budget forestalling, the effect of which on receipts in a given year varies with the date of the Budget.

Student Grants

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, for tax purposes, he will consider treating covenant payments representing parental contributions to student maintenance grants in the same manner as local education authority grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: No. Tax relief is already given for payments made under a deed of covenant.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Egger asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, further to his Budget statement on 19 March, he has any more up-to-date information about investment under the business expansion scheme.

Mr. Moore: We now know that 605 companies between them raised £100 million under the Scheme in 1983-84, and in the final results are expected to show a further slight increase on this. Nearly 60 per cent. of the total amount invested went to young and very young start-up companies, and about half of the companies invested in each raised £50,000 or less. Direct investment accounted for about 60 per cent. of the total amount invested, and investment via the approved funds for the rest.

Overall results for 1984-85 are not yet available. But we know that investment via the approved funds amounted to some £46 million (£7 million more than in 1983-84) and it is thought that direct investment was probably at least as much as this.

Privatised Public Corporations

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for each of the public corporations privatised during the period 1979 to 1984 (a) the number of shareholders by size band of holding immediately after flotation and (b) the same information at each succeeding 31 December.

Mr. Moore: [pursuant to his reply, 23 January 1985, c. 446]: The information provided previously concerning shareholdings in Amersham International was incorrect. The correct information is as follows:

Number of shares held	Number of shareholders at time of allotment
1–499	55,486
500–999	3,132
1,000–9,999	4,372
10,000–49,999	696
50,00099,999	44
100,000+	30
	63,760

The figures do not include shares held in trust for individual employees under the company's employee share ownership scheme.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing by range of income and for (a) single persons, (b) married couples without wives' earned income and (c) other married couples, the estimated annual value of claims for mortgage relief and the cost to the Exchequer, assuming the present level of interest rates prevails throughout the year;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of taxpayers in each taxation group receiving relief on mortgage interest and the average relief per mortgagor, together with the assumed rate of interest in the same manner as of his answer of 7 March 1983, Official Report, c. 284.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his replies, 18 July 1985, c. 258]: The latest estimates are given in the following table. The figures are derived from a projection from the 1982-83 survey of personal income (the latest available), on the basis of current interest rates. The table does not include the relief given to former option mortgagors who are now included in the arrangements for giving mortgage interest relief at source. I regret that it is not possible to provide reliable estimates for this group in detail. Nor is it possible to provide reliable separate estimates for the small number of elderly taxpayers with mortgages.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Borrowing (Bank Advances)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the proportion of borrowing financed by bank advances in the case of (a) all companies and (b) manufacturing in each of the years from 1977 to date.

Mr. Fletcher: The information available from the Department's analysis of the published annual accounts of a representative sample of Great Britain industrial and commercial company groups and independent companies is given in the following table. The figures include borrowing by both Great Britain companies and their United Kingdom and overseas subsidiaries as the analysis is based on the consolidated accounts of company groups. These cover the Great Britain parent company and all its United Kingdom and overseas subsidiaries. An alternative series for industrial and commercial companies, but not manufacturing, is available from the national accounts and published in "Financial Statistics" table 8.3.

*Increase in bank loans and overdrafts as a percentage of increase in total borrowing

Large companies‡

* Borrowing is defined as bank loans and overdrafts, short-term loans, debentures, mortgages and long-term loans, and is measured net of repayments and redemptions.

† Figures are grossed-up from a sample to cover all limited company groups and independent companies registered in Great Britain other than banking, insurance and financial companies. Full details are given in Business Monitor, MA3, Company Finance.

‡ "Large" defined as company groups or independent companies with capital employed of over £4·16 million.

‖ Estimates for a particular year relate to companies' accounting years ending between 1 April of the year shown and 31 March of the following year.

¶ Negative sign for 1983 indicates increase in bank borrowing because total borrowing from all sources by large companies in 1983 was negative, with repayments exceeding new borrowings. Provisional estimates show net repayments of £2·5 billion for all companies and £1 billion for manufacturing companies with increases of £4 billion and £1·5 billion respectively in bank borrowing.

Strategic Mineral Stockpile

Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what terms he proposes that the disposal of the strategic mineral stockpile should be effected.

Mr. Trippier: It has been decided to sell materials representing about one quarter of the contents of the stockpile in the course of the financial year.

The material will be offered for sale on open tender. If bids are otherwise equal in all respects, preference in disposal will be given to those involved in setting up the stockpile, namely companies on whose behalf the material was purchased, and suppliers of the material. No price preference will be given, however. In addition it is intended that the material should be disposed of in such a way as to cause the least possible disruption of the market and to retain for as long as is feasible a balanced stock of strategic minerals.

If user industries were to put forward a proposal to finance the stockpile themselves, the Department of Trade and Industry would be glad to discuss the sale of the stockpile to them.

External Power Sockets

Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to require that all external power sockets, including those to which electric lawnmowers are attached, are protected by an earth leakage circuit breaker.

Mr. Fletcher: Legislation of the type that the hon. Member proposes would essentially be a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Energy, but since I have a general responsibility for safety in and around the home I can comment that it would of course only be partially effective. The reasons are that it could not in practice be applied retrospectively and in any case many people operate lawnmowers and other outside appliances from sockets inside the house. It would therefore in my view be inappropriate.

I am however advised that the recommendations for the wiring installation in buildings prepared by the Institution of Electrical Engineers include incorporation of a residual current circuit breaker for external power outlets. This will make some contribution to reducing the risk of electrocution.

My officials are currently investigating whether there are any other measures that could be adopted which would provide additional protection against the risk of electric shock for the users of lawnmowers and similar products. I intend to make a statement shortly.

Shipyards (Public Sector)

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many shipyards the Government intend to leave in the public sector.

Mr. Butcher: Following the privatisation by March 1986 of British shipbuilders' (BS) warship activities, seven BS yards and Harland and Wolff PLC will remain in the public sector. In the longer term we hope that improved performances, coupled with improved market conditions, will enable as many as possible of these yards to return to the private sector.

Product Advertising

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list all products on which advertising is banned by regulations made by Ministers;

(2) if he will list all products on which advertising is restricted by regulations made by Ministers.

Mr. Fletcher: There are over 80 different statues and statutory instruments with relevance to the control of advertising and related trading practices. These are the responsibility of a number of different Government departments and the information requested could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Steel (Production Costs)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the wage cost of producing a ton of steel in the United Kingdom compared with other European Economic Community countries and the United States of America and Japan.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The British Steel Corporation's total employment cost of producing a tonne of liquid steel was £50 in the financial year 1984-85. Comparable data is not available for the United Kingdom as a whole, for other EC countries, the USA or Japan.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the ratio of (a) wages and (b) fuel and power to the price of finished steel in the United Kingdom compared with other European Economic Community countries and to the United States of America.

Mr. Norman Lamont: This information is not readily available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of the cost of making basic iron and steel consists of (a) repayment of capital and interest, (b) depreciation, (c) bought-in materials, (d) other overhead charges including labour overheads and (e) variable labour charges.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The available information is as follows:

The percentage of BSC costs of iron and steel making accounted for by:	1984-85 per cent.
(a) Repayment of long-term loans and interest	7
(b) Depreciation	2
(c) Raw materials and consumables	50
(d) Fuels, utilities, hire charges and carriage costs	15
(e) Wages and salaries and other employment costs	21
(f) Other operating charges	5

Vehicle Component Manufacturers

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to refuse Government financial assistance to vehicle component manufacturers based in the west midlands who seek to set up manufacturing subsidiaries adjacent to the Nissan factory in Sunderland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The purpose of Government financial assistance is to encourage increased economic growth, both generally and in the assisted areas. The Government believe, however, that the final choice of location for new investment should remain a matter for the commercial judgment of the companies concerned.

Directors' Fees

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of 15 May, Official Report, column 120, concerning the increase in directors' fees and other emoluments from 1979 onwards, if he will publish in the Official Report his follow-up letter to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby, dated 11 July, on this matter together with the enclosed tables.

Mr. Fletcher: This is as follows:

From the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Corporate and Consumer Affairs

Austin Mitchell, Esq, MP
House of Commons
LONDON
SW1A OAA

11 July 1985

Dear Austin,

You tabled a Question recently about the increase in directors' fees and other emoluments for 1979 to the latest year available.

In my written reply to you on 15 May, I said that the information was not immediately available from the Department's regular analysis of company accounts but that I would write to you as soon as possible.

We are unable to provide estimates of the total directors' fees and emoluments to all companies, but we do have some limited information for large industrial and commercial companies covered by the Department's analysis of company accounts. The purpose of the analysis is to provide estimates of the balance sheet, income and appropriation account, and sources and uses of funds of all industrial and commercial companies based upon a small representative sample of 2,600 such companies. Unfortunately the sample is not designed to produce statistically reliable estimates of directors' emoluments, and for this reason no information on these emoluments are published with the other results of the analysis in Business Monitor MA3, Company Finance. However, we do have information for the larger companies in the analysis in respect of the emoluments of the chairman and the highest paid director as shown in table 1 and table 2 attached. The population of companies varies slightly from year to year mainly as a result of takeovers and mergers, so it is not possible to derive a precise estimate of the annual increase from these figures. However, these figures are not inconsistent with the reported findings of the ICSA/Korn Ferry International survey of companies in the "Times 1,000" largest companies.

I hope this is of some assistance to you.

I have arranged for a copy of this letter to be placed in the Library.

Sincerely,
Alex
ALEX FLETCHER

Employment (French Subsidies)

Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make representations to the European Economic Community regarding the compatibility with European Economic Community regulations of the offering by the French Government of subsidies designed to attract employment to France from the United Kingdom; what representations he has received about the proposed transfer by the Terreco Group of work from Case Tractors in Meltham and Leigh to various establishments in France; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I understand the European Commission have approached the French authorities about the package of French Government support made available following the J. I. Case acquisition of the International Harvester tractor operations in France. The Government have received many representations on the future of the Meltham and Leigh plants notably from the hon. Member for Colne Valley. The Government have discussed and continue to discuss the future manufacturing operations of J. I. Case in the United Kingdom with senior management from Tenneco and its J. I. Case subsidiary.

Prosper de Mulder and Imperial Meat

Sir John Wells asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek to expedite the review by the Office of Fair Trading in the matter of Prosper de Mulder and Imperial Meat.

Mr. Fletcher: At my request the Director-General of Fair Trading is seeking undertakings from Prosper de Mulder following the MMC report on animal waste. I am being kept in touch with developments and expect to receive shortly a report by the Director-General on the outcome of his discussions with Prosper de Mulder.

British Telecom

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether his Department has between 1960 and 1985 made any capital grant payment to Post Office Telecommunications or its successors in order to secure due functioning of Post Office/British Telecom undertakings in the event of attack.

Mr. Butcher: The Department of Trade and Industry assumed responsibility for the payment of grant to the post office under the Civil Defence (Posts and Telecommunications) Regulations 1971 upon the dissolution of the Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications in 1974. Grant was paid in respect of up to 52¼ per cent. of approved capital expenditure on measures taken to secure the due functioning of the post office's undertaking in the event of hostile attack. Grant was paid to British Telecom after the split of the postal and telecommunications businesses of the post office in 1981.

Prior to 1969, appropriate facilities were provided by the General Post Office as part of its general duties as a department of central Government. Between 1971 and 1974, grant was the responsibility of the Minister of Posts and Telecommunications.

Details of grants paid since 1974 are given in the Appropriation Accounts, which are available in the Library.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the detailed purposes for which capital grant has been provided to British Telecom and its predecessor over the period 1978-79 to date in order to secure due functioning of its undertakings in the event of attack.

Mr. Butcher: I regret that it would not be in the interests of national security to provide the information requested.

British Overseas Trade Board

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will now provide substantial additional support to assist the work of the British Overseas Trade Board.

Mr. Channon: My right hon. Friend will examine carefully the future needs of the export promotion programme when considering the many competing claims in the current public expenditure round.

Steel Industry

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a list of steel plants which have been closed or substantially closed since May 1979 and the plants which have been scheduled for closure in substantial part, together with the number of jobs lost in each case.

Mr. Butcher: The following list covers closures involving more than 100 employees, and partial closures estimated to have resulted in the loss of more than 500 job opportunities, which have taken place since May 1979 or are scheduled to take place shortly.

ABTA (Code of Practice)

Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the Office of Fair Trading has examined the provisions of the Association of British Travel Agents' code of practice in so far as it relates to consolidation of holidays by tour operators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: I understand that the Office of Fair Trading is currently monitoring ABTA's two codes of practice and that this monitoring will include all aspects of the codes including the question of consolidation of holiday arrangements by tour operators.

I also understand that the office has expressed its concern to ABTA about the reported volume of consolidations this year and has asked the Association to inform the office of what action it intends to take to deal with the problem.

Metal Packaging Manufacturers Association (Exhibition)

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will arrange for an exhibition relating to energy and resource conservation and recycling of beverage containers organised by the Metal Packaging Manufacturers Association to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall from 28 October to 1 November.

Mr. Trippier: Arrangements have been made for such an exhibition in the upper waiting hall to take place from 28 October to 1 November 1985.

Vosper Shiprepairers

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on the latest position concerning the privatisation of Vosper Shiprepairers.

Mr. Butcher: British Shipbuilders is still negotiating with potential purchasers of Vosper Shiprepairers but it made clear in its evidence to the Trade and Industry Select Committee on 24 July that it will close the yard if it is unable to sell it.

Cordless Telephones

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he plans any legislation to prevent the marketing of cordless telephones.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Lewisham, East by my hon. Friend the Minister for Industry and Information Technology on 28 June at column 505.

Nationalised Industries (Overseas Project Board Report)

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the Overseas Projects Board's report of February 1984 on the overseas role of the nationalised industries.

Mr. Channon: I am making available both the Overseas Projects Board's report and the subsequent joint report by officials and the nationalised industries by depositing copies in the Libraries of both Houses.

Insolvency Bill

Mr. Porter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why the Insolvency Bill [Lords] does not include a provision to re-enact section 166 of the Bankruptcy Act 1914.

Mr. Fletcher: One of the major thrusts of the Bill is the prosecution of wrong doing in relation to insolvency. Section 166 of the Bankruptcy Act 1914 currently contains an exception to the general rule on the use of evidence in proceedings for bankruptcy. That exception falls with the non-re-enactment of the section.

Insurance Industry

Mr. Hind asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will state his conclusions on the issues raised by the decision of the courts in the case of Bedford v. Inland Revenue Board and Stewart v. Oriental.

Mr. Fletcher: The Department has consulted the insurance industry about the implications of these judgments of the High Court. Comments have also been received from others interested in the approach adopted by the Department to determining whether authorisation to carry on insurance business in the United Kingdom is required under the Insurance Companies Act 1982.

Issues relevant to this subject are raised by certain cases brought before the European Court of Justice by the Commission of the European Communities. I intend to consider those judgments before coming to a firm view. Meanwhile individual cases will be considered as they arise.

I am however able to make clear the attitude which will be adopted towards past conduct which may appear from the High Court judgments to have been unlawful.

As at present advised, the Secretary of State does not expect to take action under Part I of the Insurance Companies Act 1982 or the corresponding provisions of earlier legislation—

(a) in respect of the conduct of unauthorised overseas insurance companies who on or before the date of this statement effected or carried out contracts of insurance using arrangements and procedures in operation on or before 10 November 1983 under which either the effecting or the carrying out did not occur in the United Kingdom or the decision either to effect or to carry out was not taken in the United Kingdom; or

(b) in respect of unauthorised overseas insurance companies whose insurance activities in the United Kingdom are in future limited solely to the discharge of obligations assumed under contracts of insurance effected on or before the date of this statement whether or not the contract was effected in contravention of section 2 of the Insurance Companies Act 1982 or a corresponding provision in earlier legislation; or

(c) in respect of a United Kingdom agent where by virtue of (a) or (b) action would not be taken in respect of his principal overseas.

The Secretary of State will continue to take action in cases in which contracts were both effected and carried out in the United Kingdom through a branch office or an agent irrespective of when the arrangement in question was made, except in respect of the discharge of obligations falling within (b) above.

DEFENCE

Royal Ordnance Factories

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether there has been any delay or alteration in his plans for the flotation of the royal ordnance factories.

Mr. Butler: No. It remains the Government's objective to introduce private capital into Royal Ordnance plc as soon as commercially practicable, but no decisions have yet been taken on the precise timing or method of privatisation. The preferred option continues to be to float the company as a whole.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are circumstances in which he will postpone the proposed sale of the royal ordnance factories in 1986.

Mr. Butler: It remains the Government's intention to introduce private capital into Royal Ordnance plc as soon as commercially practicable, but no decisions have yet been taken on the precise timing.

Small Company Suppliers

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are taken by his Department to seek to ensure prompt payment to small company suppliers, whether as main contractors or subcontractors to main contractors.

Mr. Butler: The Ministry of Defence's arrangements for the payment of contractors' bills are sent annually to all our contractors irrespective of size. These arrangements include the date on which bills should be submitted within each four weekly cycle. Our aim is to make payment 7 to 10 days later, provided the bills are properly supported by the necessary documentation.

The relationship between contractors and subcontractors is a matter for the parties concerned, and one in which the MOD should not be involved. Nevertheless, I would expect contractors to pay their subcontractors in the same prompt and helpful way in which the MOD settles its payment claims.

Submarines

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United Kingdom's Trident submarines will be built to conform to the same standards, particularly in relation to noise suppression, as the United State's Trident submarines.

Mr. Butler: The United Kingdom's Trident submarines will be built to the high standards demanded by our operational requirements.

Nuclear Weapon Tests

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will extend his statement of 29 October 1984, Official Report, columns 854-5, lifting some of the restrictions of the Official Secrets Act placed on participants in the United Kingdom nuclear weapon test programme in Australia and the External Territories, to include the series of test carried out at Christmas Island and in the vicinity of Malden Island in the Pacific; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: Yes. Any participant or dependant subject to the Official Secrets Acts is now authorised to communicate to any person information in the categories defined as follows and which relates to the United Kingdom atomic test programme on Christmas Island and in the vicinity of Malden Island and the subsequent United Kingdom involvement in the United States series of tests similarly carried out on the islands in 1962 (that is from the initiation of the GRAPPLE series of tests in May 1957 to the completion of the GRAPPLE Z operation in September 1958 and the United Kingdom involvement in the US operation DOMINIC (UK Codename BRIGADOON) in 1962.

Category 1. The measures taken before, and at the time of the tests and that have been taken since, for the purpose of protecting persons against exposure to the harmful effects of ionising radiations and against contact with radioactive substances and other toxic materials used in or produced by the tests.

Category 2. The means by which buildings, equipment and materials remaining at the test sites were disposed of during and on completion of the tests.

Notwithstanding the aforementioned, any information which reveals directly or by inference could reveal details of design, construction or performance of nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices is specifically excluded from this authorisation.

Those in possession of information about which they have doubts as to whether it is covered by this authorisation should seek the advice of the Ministry of Defence.

Army Manpower Strength (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the manpower strength of the British Army in Northern Ireland on 30 June, giving details of the number of operatives in each year for the following categories: Ulster Defence Regiment, Regular British Army and British Territorial Army.

Mr. Lee: My Noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Member.

Ulster Defence Regiment

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the manpower strength of the Ulster Defence Regiment, and its Reserve, as between full-time, part-time, male and female operatives on 30 June.

Mr. Lee: The figures for 30 June 1985 are not yet available. However, the position as at 31 May was as follows:

Part-time		Full-time		Total
Male	Female	Male	Female
3,223	519	2,495	196	6,433

Military Bands

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total figure spent on military bands, including personnel and equipment, by each of the three armed services in each of the last five years.

Mr. Lee: The annual costs of service bands over the period in question were as follows:

£ million

	Royal Marines	Army	Royal Air Force
1980-81	6·40	20·83	2·34
1981-82	7·06	23·62	2·50
1982-83	7·90	25·10	2·60
1983-84	8·10	24·20	2·89
1984-85	9·33	27·90	3·79

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence what recent progress has been made in the negotiations for the European fighter aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will report progress on the development of a European fighter aircraft; and if he will proceed with the project if France expresses its intention not to participate.

Mr. Butler: Discussions on EFA are continuing as a matter of urgency. The further industrial studies have been received and were considered by the national armament directors of the participating countries at a meeting in Madrid on Tuesday. The Ministers concerned are in close touch. The British Government's aim remains to reach early agreement on a five-nation project which satisfies the military requirements and is conducted on the basis of an equitable industrial partnership.

Soviet Space Weapons

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Defence what effect the Soviet space weapon research programme is having on British and North Atlantic Treaty Organisation defence planning.

Mr. Butler: The extensive and long-standing Soviet space weapon research programme is a cause of continuing concern to both Her Majesty's Government and to the NATO Alliance as a whole. Soviet ABM capabilities are taken into account in decisions affecting the maintenance of the British strategic deterrent force. One of the important justifications for the United States' strategic defence initiative programme is the extent of Soviet research activity in this field.

Defence Equipment (Expenditure)

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of United Kingdom defence spending is on equipment manufactured in the United States of America: and what information he has as to the proportion of United States' defence spending on equipment manufactured in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Butler: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to publish detailed figures of our defence purchases from individual countries, nor does the United States Government publish equivalent figures for their purchases from the United Kingdom; but the current balance of defence trade between the United States and the Kingdom is in the order of 2:1.

Aero Engine Parts

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to purchase aero engine parts for the armed forces only from manufacturers who are owned or controlled by United Kingdom nationals.

Mr. Butler: No. The criteria for decisions on procurement sourcing remain as set out in the Open Government Document "Value for Money in Defence Equipment Procurement", which was published in October 1983.

NATO Papers

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will place in the Library copies of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation unclassified allied tactical papers.

Mr. Lee: NATO produces a range of Allied tactical publications. If the hon. Gentleman will let me know which particular area he is interested in, I shall consider what might be made available to him.

Imber Firing Range (Incident)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the circumstances of the incident on the evening of 19 July at Stoke Hill, near Imber firing range, in which a civilian vehicle was hit by a Landrover of the Royal Greenjackets while on a public road.

Mr. Lee: I am not aware of any such incident on 19 July but a minor accident did occur at Stoke Hill on 18 July on a road passing through Ministry of Defence property. A military landrover, which was taking part in an exercise on the Salisbury plain training area was struck, while stationary, by a civilian car. No-one was injured and the resultant damage to both vehicles was assessed as slight.

Atomic Demolition Munitions

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether units of the British Army of the Rhine have engaged in joint training with the United States forces to practice the employment of atomic demolition munitions.

Mr. Lee: Yes.

Radiation Tests

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if HMS Starling, HMS Eagle and HMS Birmingham were involved in radiation tests during 1953.

Mr. Butler: No.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what tests on the affects of radiation have been carried out in the last three years.

Mr. Butler: A number of such tests have been carried out but none involving HM ships.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of decontamination procedures carried out in ships involved in nuclear tests between 1950 and 1956; and where this decontamination took place.

Mr. Butler: There were two series of tests conducted by the United Kingdom in the period 1950 to 1956 that involved the use of ships. The first, Operation Hurricane, was carried out in October 1952 in the Monte Bello Islands off the west coast of Australia and consisted of one test. The ships concerned, HMS Campania, Narvik, Tracker and Zeebrugge, were outside the direct effects of the explosion and as a result were subjected to contamination only through their contact with sea water which had itself been contaminated by the radioactive products of the explosion. Decontamination procedures consisted of washing, scrubbing and hosing down those parts of the ships that were directly exposed to contact with sea water, ie ships' boats and underwater inlets. Appropriate precautions were taken during these procedures, including the monitoring of those personnel employed in these tasks.

On their return to the United Kingdom several months after the test, further action was taken in various royal dockyards to remove any remaining residual contamination. Because several months' delay had occurred between the time of the test and the return to the United Kingdom, the residual contamination was light. Whilst the work was carried out the necessary health physics precautions were, of course, taken.

The second series of tests, Operation Mosaic, was carried out in May and June 1956 also in the Monte Bello Islands. Three ships were involved, HMS Alert, Diana and Narvik. The only vessel exposed to radioactive fallout was HMS Diana. As part of the tests, this ship was required to steam through clouds of fallout generated by the explosions, in order to test the ventilation and wash down arrangements. These proved satisfactory. Levels of contamination on the ship were checked subsequently to the vessel's actual participation in the tests. It was found that, due to the efficiency of the wash down arrangements, residual contamination was minimal.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the Royal Navy ships involved in radiation tests between 1950 and 1956.

Mr. Butler: I shall answer shortly.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Australian Royal Commission has asked his Department to supply any information concerning HMS Starling, HMS Eagle and HMS Birmingham and their involvement in radiation tests.

Mr. Butler: No.

Operation Cauldron

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place copies of all available documents relating to the germ welfare experiment, Operation Cauldron, in 1952, in the Library.

Mr. Lee: No; the documents requested remain classified.

Defence Situation Centre

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any plans to alter the location or facilities of the defence situation centre.

Mr. Butler: I shall answer shortly.

Sizewell "B" Inquiry

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department incurred any expenditure in relation to the Sizewell "B" public inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: My Department was not involved in the Sizewell "B" public inquiry but in their normal course of duty some Ministry of Defence staff spent a very small proportion of their time watching out for any MOD interest in the proceedings. I am afraid that it is not possible to quantify the expenditure this entailed.

Nimrod Aircraft (Civil Call Signs)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence why a Nimrod aircraft was required to mimic the call sign and behaviour of a transatlantic civil airliner whilst shadowing and photographing current Soviet exercises off the coast of Norway; and what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the implications of this incident for the future safety and security of civil air traffic.

Mr. Lee: I am not aware of any incident such as that referred to by the hon. Member.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what contacts his Department's staff have with medical boards on mobility allowance cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: In seeking consistent adjudication, it has long been the practice for the Department's medical staff to refer mobility allowance cases back to the medical board if it was thought that the board's decision, or the record of it, needed clarification or reconsideration. A commissioner's decision has criticised this practice where the reference was, in effect, inviting the medical board to alter the substance of its decision and the board subsequently did so. Some people will have gained benefit as a result of such reconsideration by the board. Others will have lost benefit.

In the light of the commissioner's comments, we have decided that it would be right to take the necessary steps to identify the cases involved and initiate appropriate action to put matters right. This requires a special scrutiny of over ½ million files. When the cases are found, we do not intend to disturb those where the medical board's decision was altered in the claimant's favour. But where a favourable decision was altered by the medical board to an adverse one, we propose dealing with them in one of two ways, depending on whether or not the claimant had appealed to a medical appeal tribunal against the decision of the medical board. Where the claimant had not appealed, we propose referring the case to a medical appeal tribunal to determine it afresh. As regards those cases where the claimant had appealed, we propose taking a test case to the commissioner to determine whether the medical appeal tribunal decision should stand.

Instructions have already been issued to prevent reference back to medical boards by Departmental staff outside the terms of the regulations. We are looking into the position as regards industrial disablement benefit to see to what extent a similar practice of reference back to medical boards have applied.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services pursuant to the reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on 12 November 1984, Official Report, columns 143-4, if he has reached a decision on repayment of mobility allowance consequent to commissioner's decision R(M)2/82; and if he will make a further statement.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 3 April 1985, c. 639]: The commissioner's decision R(M)2/82 held that, contrary to our previous understanding, the claimant had no right of appeal against the length of a mobility allowance award where it coincided with the recommendation of the examining medical practitioner. It follows that, where a claimant had in fact appealed to a medical board in these circumstances and the board, in considering the whole case afresh, had decided he did not satisfy the conditions for the allowance, the consequent withdrawal of benefit should not have occurred.

I am glad to say that we have now found a way to identify these cases fairly readily through our overpayment records. Once we have done so, we propose dealing with them in one of two ways. As regards those cases where the claimant did not appeal to a medical appeal tribunal against the decision of the medical board, we propose referring the case to a tribunal, inviting it to regard the earlier decision as a nullity and to determine the case afresh. As regards those cases where the claimant did appeal against the decision of the medical board, we propose taking a test case to the Commissioner to determine whether the medical appeal tribunal decision should stand.

I am replying accordingly to a letter from the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation who raised the matter with me, and I am sending a copy of my reply to the right hon. Member.

The regulations were of course amended in August 1983 to give claimants the appeal right which the commissioner's decision held the existing law did not give.

Housing Benefit (Pensioners)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioner householders there are in receipt of housing benefit who have non-dependants living with them for whom a deduction from housing benefit is made.

Mr. Newton: It is estimated that there are about 450,000 pensioner households in receipt of housing benefit from which a deduction is made in respect of non-dependants.

Mental Health Act Commission

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost to public funds of the Mental Health Act Commission for the year 1985-86; how many staff are employed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The estimated cost in 1985-86 is £1,022,000. Nineteen staff are employed at the three secretariat offices. Seventy one per cent. of the total cost is for the fees and expenses of commissioners and second opinion work. The remainder is for staff salaries, accommodation and general expenses.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether non-dependant deductions made from the housing benefit of households with non-dependant income support claimants living in them will be abolished.

Mr. Newton: This is a matter for further consideration in the light of comments made during the consultative period on the "Reform of Social Security: Programme for Change" (Cmnd. 9518).

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish details of the basis on which the non-dependant deductions to rent and rate rebates, now housing benefit have been increased each year since their introduction; in each year what percentage increase was involved; and how that compared with the percentage by which the needs allowance was uprated.

Mr. Whitney: The information in the form requested is set out in the table.

I understand that under the rate rebate, rent rebate and rent allowance schemes, which preceded housing benefit, the basis for any uprating of non-dependant deductions was the movement in the general retail prices index. Between 1972 and 1976 no increases were made but in 1976 deductions were increased to restore them to 1972 levels. Increases between 1977 and 1981 were made in line with changes in the general retail prices index. In 1982, prior to the introduction of the housing benefits scheme, the deductions were increased to bring them into line with deductions which were applied under the supplementary benefits scheme. It was decided, that with the introduction of housing benefit in 1983 all non-dependant deductions would follow in future the practice under the supplementary benefit scheme which was to uprate them in line with the movement of the housing element of the retail prices index.

The increases shown in April 1984 were part of the measures we took then to limit the growth in housing benefit expenditure.

* The statutory rate rebate, rent rebate and rent allowance schemes were introduced in 1972. The first uprating was in 1973.

† Between 1973 and 1981 the needs allowances were uprated by a cash amount equal to the increase in the supplementary benefit long term needs rate. Since 1982, the main element of the needs allowances has been increased in line with increases in the supplementary benefit long term needs rate and, in addition, the housing element has been increased in line with the movement in average weekly local authority rents, domestic rates, and water and sewerage charges.

† Range of percentage increases applied to different categories of non-dependent deductions.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in what circumstances young people under 25 years of age will qualify for housing benefit under his social security review proposals; and whether single people, married couples and lone parents will be treated similarly.

Mr. Newton: As at present, any householder will be able to claim housing benefit. However, we are proposing that in calculating entitlement, the rules for housing benefit should be aligned with those for income support. This means that the proposed income support structure, including different rates according to whether the claimant is above or below 25, and single or married, plus special premiums for lone parents and those with families, will be reflected in the housing benefit assessment.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate how many persons will receive less in housing benefit, or have to pay more towards their rent and rates costs, as a result of the changes in non-dependent deductions to be implemented in November 1985; and how much money the changes involve.

Mr. Newton [pursuance to his reply, 8 July 1985, c. 367]: We estimate that approximately 1 million households will be affected by increases in the levels of deductions made from housing benefit in respect of non-dependants to take effect from November 1985. The estimated cost of not uprating the levels of these deductions would be approximately £30 million.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will show the weekly gross and net earnings levels at which eligibility for housing benefit will expire, assuming average amounts for rent and rates, following the proposals for the November 1985 uprating in respect of the following household types, assuming one wage-earner: (a) single person, (b) married couple, (c) married couple with one child, (d) married couple with two children, (e) married couple with three children and (f) married couple with an 18-year-old in work or training, living at home; and if he will also provide information on the net income derived from these earnings levels taking account of income from child benefit and expenditure on housing costs, including water rates, and average travel to work costs.

Mr. Newton [pursuance to his reply, 8 July 1985, c. 367-68]: The information requested is given in the table.

Earnings levels at which housing benefit will expire
November 1985

	(i) Gross earnings £	(ii) Net earnings £	(iii) Net income £
Household type*
(a) single person	91·95	68·82	42·22
(b) married couple	114·45	89·75	63·15
(c) married couple with one child	123·16	96·20	74·08
(d) married couple with two children	139·04	102·31	85·81
(e) married couple with three children	142·54	104·68	97·38
(f) married couple with 18 year old non-dependant in work/training	92·54	70·38	57·58

* The following rent and rate levels respectively have been assumed for the various household types: £13·45 and £5·20 for (a) and (b); £13·40 and £6·25 for (c) and (f); £16·55 and £6·40 for (d) and (e).

† As requested, the figures in column (iii) are obtained by subtracting full rent and rates, £5·90 for fares to work, and £1·65 for water rates from column (ii), and then adding child benefit where appropriate. For household (f), the non-dependant contribution of £10·45 has also been added. If the non-dependant were on a Youth Training scheme, no non-dependant deduction would be made.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many households on supplementary benefit are subject to non-dependant deductions from housing benefit.

Mr. Whitney [pursuance to his reply, 9 July 1985, c. 375]: We estimate that there are approximately 400,000 households on supplementary benefit which have deductions made from housing benefit in respect of non-dependants.

Drugs (Promotion)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy that drug companies supplying drugs through the National Health Service should not seek to promote drugs directly to the consumer.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Regulations under the Medicines Act 1968 prohibit drug companies from advertising prescription-only medicines to the public. We can see no reason to prevent drug companies from advertising over-the-counter medicines which patients frequently buy direct from chemist shops and other retail outlets although they are often prescribable under the National Health Service. There are restrictions on the way in which over-the-counter medicines may be advertised.

Drugs (Studies)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will request the Committee on Safety of Medicines to require investigations into light relatedness in toxicity studies on drugs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The guidelines on the pre-clinical and clinical testing of medicinal products are drawn up on the advice of the Committee on Safety of Medicines. The committee has not advised that this should be a requirement. The occurrence of a rash, including one induced by light sensitivity, in a clinical trial would be reported in the results and would be taken into account by the Committee in its evaluation of the product.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will request the Committee on Safety of Medicines to ensure that all tests of significance produced by manufacturers' statisticians in clinical trials of drugs are automatically checked by the committee's statisticians;

(2) in what ways the Committee on Safety of Medicine checks the validity of the results obtained from drug clinical trials.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Chislehurst on 29 January at columns 161-2. In assessing the evidence in particular cases, the committee, having received an assessment from its professional secretariat, decides whether tests of statistical significance need to be checked before it gives its advice to the Licensing Authority.

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether it is the practice for members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines to declare an interest when the committee is discussing a drug manufactured by a company with which a member has had a financial relationship, and to abstain from the discussion;

(2) if he will provide a list of the members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines and the names of the drug companies with which they have had a financial relationship and the nature of the relationship.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply on 3 June to the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) at columns 107-10.

Wheelchair Users

Mr. Harris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give statistics on the total number of wheelchair users in the United Kingdom and a breakdown into age groups, male and female, and broad categories of ailments.

Mr. Newton: The figures requested are not at present available, but it is estimated that about 420,000 people use wheelchairs provided by the Health Departments and that some 80 per cent. are over 60 years of age. Information about the number and characteristics of wheelchair users will be collected in a survey of disabled people being conducted by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Family Income Supplement

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest figures for the number of (a) one-parent families and (b) two-parent families in receipt of family income supplement; in each case what are the average payments; and how many families in each category receive the maximum payment allowed.

Mr. Whitney: The position at the end of April 1985, the latest date for which information is available, was as follows:

	Numbers in receipt of FIS	Average payment	Numbers receiving maximum
Two-parent families	117,000	£31·50	15,000
One-parent families	82,000	£13·20	11,000
Total	199,000	—	26,000

Supplementary Benefit

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of one-parent families and two-parent families in receipt of supplementary benefit for each of the last five years; what was the average payment; and what was the average length of time spent on supplementary benefit.

Mr. Whitney: The information to the latest date available is as follows:

	One-parent families			Two-parent families

Mr. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest available figures for the number of (a) female lone parents and (b) male lone parents in receipt of supplementary benefit who are (i) single, (ii) widowed, (iii) divorced, (iv) separated and (v) a prisoner's spouse, giving the number of children in each category and the average payment to each category.

Mr. Whitney: The available information, for December 1983, is as follows:

	(a) Female lone parents			(b) Male lone parents

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of special rules about income earned during the on-season in relation to the eligibility of seasonal workers for supplementary benefit.

Mr. Whitney: People who engage in seasonal work are entitled to supplementary benefit during their off-season if they are unemployed and available for full-time work, but on-season earnings may affect the amount of supplementary benefit payable.

If the on-season earnings of a claimant exceed two-and-half times his normal and additional requirements (three times the single household ordinary rate, if greater) the excess is regarded as available for the weeks of the off-season. The excess is divided by the number of weeks in the off-season and the result is treated as weekly earnings, subject to the normal earnings disregard.

Family Incomes

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest available figures for the number of (a) one-parent families headed by a woman, (b) one-parent families headed by a man and (c) two-parent families which rely on (i) state benefits, (ii) earnings from employment, (iii) maintenance payments and (iv) other items as their main source of income.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 21 November 1984 at column 201.

One-parent Benefit

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest available figures on the numbers of one-parent families receiving one-parent benefit; if he will estimate how many of these do not benefit financially from doing so; how many lone parents who would benefit financially from one-parent benefit do not receive it; and what is the percentage take-up rate.

Mr. Whitney: In July 1985, 581,000 families are receiving one parent benefit. The latest estimates of take-up, and the other figures requested, relate to December 1982. At that time 510,000 one parent families received one parent benefit and of those 185,000 did not gain by claiming. A further 100,000 one parent families might have gained financially if they had claimed. The take-up rate was 75 per cent. of those who stand to gain by claiming.

Opren

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the estimate of the Committee on Safety of Medicines of the number of people who took Opren who had photo sensitivity reaction;

(2) when the Committee on Safety of Medicines requested further evidence about the two side effects of Opren photo sensitivity and onycholysis; and whether it was given any evidence or papers prepared by people not employed by the manufacturing company Eli Lilley;

(3) how many clinical trials were examined by the Committee on Safety of Medicines before it gave a product licence to Opren; how many patients were involved; how many received the drug at a sub-therapeutic dose; how many of the trials lasted longer than three weeks; how many involved more than 40 people; how many were double blind trials;

(4) what experimental studies were reported to the Committee on Safety of Medicines by the manufacturers of the drug Opren as evidence of the drug's freedom from carcinogenicity;

(5) whether the Committee on Safety of Medicines decided that the study of the side effects of Opren by Walter M. Mikulaschek provided by the manufacturing company after a request for further information was of a scientific standard acceptable to them;

(6) if the Committee on Safety of Medicines requested evidence of the safety of Opren on old people before it issued a product licence;

(7) whether any of the clinical trials on Opren carried out in the United States of America or in the United Kingdom and available to his Department, showed that older patients were more likely to suffer adverse reactions;

(8) whether the Committee on Safety of Medicines before it gave a product licence to the drug Opren, requested evidence of freedom from carcinogenicity from the manufacturing company.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: These questions concern matters contained in statements of claim in current legal actions against the Department of Health and Social Security and the Committee on Safety of Medicines. I am advised that they are therefore sub judice.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether Professor Sir Abraham Goldberg, the chairman of the Committee on Safety of Medicines, was ever employed by Eli Lilley to do research into Opren; if members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines were made aware of Professor Sir Abraham Goldberg's past involvement with the company; and if Professor Sir Abraham Goldberg took part in the committee's deliberations on Opren;

(2) if Eli Lilly and its British subsidiary disclosed immediately to the Committee on Safety of Medicines all the evidence it had of adverse reactions to Opren.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The matters raised in these questions fall within the issues contained in statements of claim in legal actions against our Department and the Committee on Safety of Medicines and are sub judice. We and the committee intend to defend those actions.

I feel, however, that because of the personal nature of some of the innuendos, it is right to put the following facts on the record. Professor Sir Abraham Goldberg has never been employed by Eli Lilly. In 1978-80 staff of his university department carried out a study on gastric bleeding with benoxaprofen (Opren) and flurbiprofen, financed by the company. Such financing is normal practice where university departments carry out studies on behalf of the pharmaceutical industry. Sir Abraham gave advice on the planning of the study but was not involved in the conduct of the study. This role was set out on the record when the report of the study by Dr. Yeung Laiwah and others, was published in 1981 in the Annals of Rheumatic Diseases. In January 1980, staff of his department began planning a further study at the request of Eli Lilley into gastric bleeding with benoxaprofen and piroxicam. This study continued into 1982 but was never completed. He gave no advice on that study and took no part in it.

Sir Abraham was not a member of the Committee on Safety of Medicines when it gave its advice to licence Opren in February 1980. He was appointed to the committee from March 1980 and was fully involved in all the committee's discussions leading up to the withdrawal of the product from the United Kingdom market in August 1982.

I must make it clear that I have complete confidence in the integrity and judgment of Professor Sir Abraham Goldberg. I regret that the right hon. Member should use parliamentary questions to make thinly veiled attacks on named individuals and to embark on a search for information in support of legal claims.

Product Licences

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Committee on Safety of Medicines requires clinical trials supporting a request for a product licence to be double blind trials.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: This is not a standard requirement. The design of a clinical trial will depend on the condition being treated and the effectiveness of the medicinal product being tested. In some cases a double blind trial is essential, but in others, for example where a very effective drug is to be used to treat a life-threatening condition, such a trial would not be appropriate.

One-parent Families

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the latest position as regards the implementation by his Department of the recommendations which affect its responsibilities of the report of the Finer committee on one-parent families.

Mr. Whitney: The recommendations affecting and accepted by the Department have been implemented in whole or in part.

Resource Allocation Working Party (Formulae)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department makes adjustments to the Resource Allocation Working Party's formulae to take account of the numbers of patients receiving private medical care and treatment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No adjustments are made at national level. The Resource Allocation Working Party recommended that in distributing resources to health authorities within a region, regional health authorities should have regard to special local factors such as the extent to which alternative facilities relieve or add pressure on the National Health Service.

Appeals

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many appeals were outstanding at the latest available date against decisions made on the revised board and lodging regulations.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Unemployment Benefits

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the total current annual cost of benefits to the unemployed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Whitney: The estimated total cost of benefits paid in respect of unemployment in the United Kingdom is £6·6 billion for 1985-86.

Reform of Social Security

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in full the equivalence scales used in the technical and statistical annex to paper I of volume 3 of the Reform of Social Security; and if he will also state the origin of these scales.

Mr. Newton: Following are the equivalence scales:

	Equivalence income scale
Married couple (householders)	1·00
Single householder	0·61
Married couple (non-householder)	0·78
Single non-householder	0·42
Child aged 0-1	0·09
2-4	0·18
5-7	0·21
8-10	0·23
11-12	0·25
13-15	0·27
15-18	0·36

The scales were derived from the family expenditure survey (United Kingdom) for 1971 and 1972. Further details of the derivation of these scales is given in Social Trends, Number 8 (HMSO, 1977) at pp. 27-29.

Benefits (Children)

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many and what percentages of working families falling within the lowest quintile of income distribution in 1982 were dependent on a single wage; and of these how many had a child under five years of age.

Mr. Whitney: It is estimated* that there were about 625,000 working families† with children falling within the lowest quintile of income distribution‡ in 1982. Of these about 500,000 (about 80 per cent.) were dependent on a single wage‖ and of these about 250,000 had at least one child under five years of age.

* The estimates have been derived from analyses of 1982 family expenditure survey data.
† Includes one parent families.
‡ Income is taken to be net equivalent income: that is, adjusted for family size and composition.
‖ Second wages of £4 a week or less have been ignored.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures showing the weekly rates of child support, national insurance child addition plus child benefit, with national insurance long-term benefits, in November of each year since 1979, including November 1985, at current and at November 1985 prices.

Mr. Whitney: The combined weekly rates of child benefit plus child dependancy additions to national insurance long-term benefits in November of each year from 1979 were:

1979	11·10
1980	12·25
1981	12·95
1982	13·80
1983	14·10
1984	14·50

Their value at November 1985 prices cannot be calculated until the retail price index for November is available. The combined weekly rate from November 1985 will be £15·05.

Income Support

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether his proposed new income support rates will be less for married parents under 25 years of age than for lone parents;

(2) if he will ensure that the rates of his proposed new income support system do not penalise two-parent families by comparison with lone parents.

Mr. Newton: Decisions on the rates of income support that would apply have not yet been taken, but in deciding the balance between rates for different groups we will take account of the considerations referred to by my hon. Friend.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will ensure that his proposed income support system does not penalise married and cohabiting couples by comparison with single people of opposite sexes sharing accommodation, and by comparison with divorced or separated married couples.

Mr. Newton: We expect that the current rules governing the circumstances in which claimants are treated as living together would continue to apply under the proposed income support scheme.

"Low Income Families"

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects publication of "Low Income Families 1983".

Mr. Whitney: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 3 July to my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) at column 177.

Working Families

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services further to his reply to the hon. Member for Carshalton, Official Report, 3 July, if he will now publish figures for 1984, or the latest available date, showing the estimated numbers of working families with gross incomes, excluding state benefits, in the following income ranges: under £80, £80 to £89, £90 to £99, £100 to £109, £110 to £119, £120 to £129, £130 to £139, £140 to £149, £150 to £159, £160 to £169, £170 to £179, £180 to £189, £190 to £199, £200 to £219, £220 to £239, £240 to £259, £260 to £279, £280 to £299 and £300 and over, respectively, distinguishing between one-and two-parent families, between one-and two-wage families and between families with each of one, two, three and four or more dependent children.

Notes:

1. The figures are derived from the 1981 Family Expenditure Survey and are subject to sampling error. All figures have been rounded to the nearest 10,000 and so rows and columns may not sum exactly to the totals shown.
2. Gross weekly income is the income reported in 1981 without any updating.
3. A "working family" is defined as one where at least one parent is in full-time employment or self-employment. The figures include families where the head has been sick or unemployed for less than 3 months—in these cases income has been taken as the family's income when the head was in work.
4. The figures exclude any families not living in private households.
5. A "two-wage family" is one where the second wage exceeds £4 a week.

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures for 1984 or the latest available date, showing estimated numbers of out of work but working age families, with gross incomes, including state benefits, in each of the following income ranges: under £50, £50 to £59, £60 to £69, £70 to £79, £80 to £89, £90 to £99, £100 to £109, £110 to £119, £120 to £129, £130 to £139, £140 to £149 and £150 and over, respectively, including housing benefit and distinguishing between one and two-parent families, between families with each of one, two, three and four or more dependent children and between recipients of each of the main national insurance benefits, including statutory sick pay, and in each case without supplementary benefit, and recipients of supplementary benefit.

Notes:

1. The figures are derived from the 1981 Family Expenditure Survey and are subject to sampling error. All figures have been rounded to the nearest 10,000 and so rows and columns may not sum exactly to the totals shown.
2. The totals do not coincide exactly with other published statistics. This is due to the different data sources.
3. Gross weekly income includes rent and rate rebates, and is the income reported in 1981 without any updating.
4. An 'out of work family' is defined as one where neither parent is in full-time employment or self-employment, except that families where the head has been sick or unemployed for less than 3 months are included.
5. The figures exclude any families not living in private households.
6. 'Other' NI benefits include maternity and widows' benefits.

Allowance Claims

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of (a) mobility allowance claims and (b) attendance allowance claims succeed upon the first re-application and subsequent re-applications.

Mr. Newton: I assume that my hon. Friend is referring to fresh claims made on the termination of an existing award which was given for a limited period. The information requested for 1984 is as follows:

(a) 83·1 per cent.
(b) 85·1 per cent.

It is not possible to distinguish between first renewal of an award and second and subsequent renewals.

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims were made for mobility allowance in the last three years; and what percentage succeeded without (a) the appeals procedure being used, (b) after the first stage of appeal and (c) after the second stage of appeal.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. The information available is as follows. It relates to decisions given in the relevant years, not to the results of claims made in those years.

	Claims			Appeals

Notes:
Cols. (1)-(3) Figures for renewal claims are shown separately in brackets marked * but included in the total.
Cols. (4)-(9) Figures include renewal claims.

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims were made for attendance allowance in the last three years and what percentage succeeded (a) without the appeal procedure being used, (b) after the first stage of appeal and (c) after the second stage of appeal.

Mr. Newton: The information available relates to decisions given in the relevant years, not to the results of claims made in those years. Details of the number of decisions on attendance allowance made on initial applications in 1982 and 1983 are given in table 14.05 of Social Security Statistics 1984. The equivalent information for 1984 is as follows:

	Numbers
Initial claims decided	239,804
First awards
Higher rate	67,445
Lower rate	114,325
Rejections	58,034

The percentage of initial decisions for 1982, 1983 and 1984 resulting in an award was 74·7, 73·4 and 75·8 respectively.

Appeals against disallowance because of failure to satisfy the medical conditions are made by requesting the Attendance Allowance Board to review the decision. There is no further right of appeal against the board's decision on the medical conditions. Details of review decisions in 1982 and 1983 (including reviews of existing awards where there has been a change in the beneficiary's circumstances) are given in table 14.22 of Social Security Statistics 1984.

The equivalent information for 1984 is as follows:

	Numbers
Total decisions	33,374
Successful	23,184
Unsuccessful	10,190
	Percentage
Success rate	69·5

Benefits (Girocheque)

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average cost of issuing a giro benefit cheque; and how many have been issued to a value below that average cost figure during the last 12 months.

Mr. Whitney: The average cost of issuing a giro benefit cheque varies from 65 pence for a computer produced cheque up to £1·20 for a manually produced cheque. Wherever possible, small amounts of benefit are not paid by giro but are added to other payments due, but figures are not available for the number of cases in which small payments have proved necessary.

South London Hospitals

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the increase in waiting lists and waiting times for gynaecology inpatient and outpatient treatment respectively in south London hospitals following the closure of the South London hospital for women.

Mr. John Patten: The requested information on outpatients is not available centrally. The available information for in-patients is given in the table. In general, figures on waiting lists are believed to include a significant proportion of duplicated entries and patients who no longer require treatment. About half of all admissions to hospital are immediate and many of those on waiting lists already have a planned date of admission.

Health and Personal Statistics

Mr. Mescher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will update table 3:14a of the latest "Health and Personal Social Service Statistics for England" by giving data for 1981 to 1984.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The updated figures requested for the years 1981 to 1983 are shown in the table. We do not yet have figures for 1984 at this level of detail.

The table is due to be published shortly as part of the 1985 edition of "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics".

Visit Statistics

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each of the years 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, for England (a) the total number of visits by district nurses and the rate per 1,000 population and (b) the number of persons first seen by a district nurse and the rate per 1,000 population for the following age groups (i) up to five years, (ii) five to 16 years, (iii) 16 to 64 years, (iv) 65 years and over and (v) all ages.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect centrally information on the total number of visits by district nurses. The table shows the number of persons treated by district nurses. Patients are counted and their age recorded at the time of their first treatment by a district nurse within the health district during the calendar year. We do not yet have statistics for 1984.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, if he will list for each of the years 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984 for England (a) the total number of visits by health visitors and the rate per 1,000 population and (b) the number of persons first seen by a health visitor and the rate per 1,000 population for the following age groups (i) children born that year, (ii) up to five years, (iii) five to 16 years, (iv) 16 to 64 years, (v) 65 years and over and (vi) all ages.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is given in the table. All visits other than those to households where there is tuberculosis or other infectious diseases are included. A "first visit" is defined as the first visit received by a person from any member of the health visiting staff in the health district during the calendar year. If a person who has been seen by a health visitor moves to a new health district and is visited there by a health visitor during the same calendar year, "first visits" will be recorded in respect of this person by both health districts. It is therefore possible for the number of first visits to exceed the population in a given age group. We do not yet have statistics for 1984.

School Meals

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the administrative cost involved in paying that element of family credit designed to cover school meals to the member of the family in receipt of child benefit where this is not the wage earner; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We cannot at this stage make a reliable estimate of the additional administrative cost involved in such a proposal.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will introduce a computerised system to enable general practitioners to ascertain in each health care district which consultant in each speciality has the shortest waiting list for (a) inpatients and (b) outpatients.

Mr. John Patten: Departmental guidance on the management of inpatient waiting lists suggests that waiting list information should be made available to general practitioners so that a patient may be given the opportunity to be referred to a hospital with a shorter wait. We are at present funding a pilot study in the West Midlands Region making use of a computer system to test the effect upon referral practice of providing general practitioners with regular information about total (both inpatient and out-patient) waiting times at hospitals outside their own district. If this proves successful we will consider how it might be extended more widely.

Short-Term Funding

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all current or proposed short-term funding initiatives by his Department which include an element of direct services to clients by voluntary organisations which are also within the competence of local social services authorities.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to my reply today to my hon. Friend the Member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) for a list of our schemes of grants to voluntary organisations, and of the organisations which received grants in 1984-85. In general these schemes of grants maintain the long standing tradition of enabling voluntary organisations to provide services of a kind which the statutory services also have the power to provide.

Covenant Payments

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether, for the purposes of claiming supplementary and other means-tested benefits, he will consider treating covenant payments representing parental contributions to student maintenance grants as local education authority grants; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether, in assessing the income of student claimants for rent allowance during term-time, covenant payments representing parental contributions to student maintenance grants are deemed to cover term-time alone or the entire calendar year;

(3) whether, in assessing the income of student claimants for supplementary benefit during the summer vacation, covenant payments representing parental contribution to student maintenance grants are deemed to cover term-time alone or the entire calendar year.

Mr. Newton: So far as supplementary benefit is concerned the chief adjudication officer has issued guidance which states that, where the amount paid to a student under a covenant together with the tax refund is no more than the assessed parental contribution, the total should not be taken into account for benefit purposes during the summer vacation. Students are unlikely to qualify for family income supplement because they will not satisfy the full-time work condition.

For housing benefit, in general we would expect local authorities to take a parental contribution paid by means of a covenant into account on the same basis as the grant to which it relates. For most students this will mean that payments are taken into account only in term-time and the Christmas and Easter vacations. However, circumstances may arise in which the terms of a covenant are such that an authority decides to take the income into account over a longer period. We have no plans to change the relevant legislation. However, I understand that the chief adjudication officer is considering issuing further guidance on supplementary benefit.

Board and Lodging

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he intends to increase (a) the personal allowance and (b) the meals allowance for those receiving payments for board and lodging in November.

Mr. Newton: (a) Yes; (b) No.

Family Credit Scheme

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether it is proposed to introduce transitional regulations to protect family income supplement recipients against any cash losses resulting from the introduction of the family credit scheme.

Mr. Newton: The detailed transitional arrangements for family income supplementary recipients on the introduction of the proposed family credit scheme are still being considered.

Administrator Position

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultation there was with his Department about the method of advertising of the post of emergency beds service administrator of the south-east Thames regional health authority before the post was filled; whether his Department was consulted about the appointment to the post of Mr. John Cross; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The appointment of the administrator of the London emergency bed service is a matter for the South-East Thames regional health authority about which we would not normally expect to be consulted.

I understand that the chairman of South-East Thames regional health authority has recently written to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Short) making it clear that this appointment has no untoward implications for the future of the service.

Presence Test

Mr. John Hunt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now provide further details of the operation of the presence test in respect of eligibility for income support payments under the proposals contained in the Green Paper, "Programme for Change"; and if he will explain, in particular, how this test will operate in respect of refugees and asylum seekers.

Mr. Whitney: I would refer my hon. Friend to my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 22 July.

Mrs. A. Carr

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he proposes to give a substantive reply to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside's letters of 5 July, 11 June, 26 April and 26 February 1985 and 11 December 1984, concerning the case of Mrs. A. Carr of Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I regret the delay in dealing with this difficult and complex case, and have written again to the hon. Member to explain the current position.

Benefits (Unclaimed)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the estimated amount of money unclaimed by pensioners entitled to supplementary benefit in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Whitney: The estimated amount of supplementary benefit unclaimed by pensioners likely to be entitled to but not claiming supplementary pension in 1981, the latest date for which information is available, was £210 million.

Self-Help

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give further encouragement to the growth of local self-help and mutual aid groups dealing with specific health or social problems or conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: There are hundreds of local self help and mutual aid groups throughout the country which make a significant contribution to meeting health or social service needs. The sorts of groups I have in mind are, for example, those of people looking after heavily dependent relatives or stroke support groups. Some support by way of advice or information can often make the difference between a group continuing to flourish or fading away. Local voluntary organisations can provide such support if they have the resources to do so.

I am therefore making available up to £1·75 million to help strengthen local advice and support services provided by local voluntary organisations for self help and mutual aid groups formed round specific health or social conditions or problems.

The money will be used to explore ways of helping and supporting self-help groups by for example, providing advice, information, and help with places to meet. It will do this by funding for three years about 20 local projects under the wing of existing local voluntary organisations such as councils for voluntary service. Each project will be designed to help existing or potential self help groups in their areas.

The scheme has been designed in co-operation with and will be run by a group of national voluntary organisations who are coming together for this purpose under the title of the Self Help Alliance.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what support his Department gave to voluntary organisations in 1984-85.

Mr. John Patten: We believe that the voluntary and informal sectors make a vital contribution to meeting needs in the health and personal social services fields. We have therefore increased the total real value of our grants to voluntary organisations by 121 per cent. between 1978-79 and 1984-85. voluntary organisations which received grants in 1984-85 are listed in the tables.

Cancer (West Cumbria)

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in setting up the body referred to in recommendation 10(d) of the report of the independent advisory group chaired by Sir Douglas Black which investigated the possible increased incidence of cancer in West Cumbria.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government have decided to set up a committee on the medical aspects of radiation in the environment (COMARE). This will be an expert advisory committee with members chosen by the Chief Medical Officer for their medical and scientific expertise. It will offer Government independent medical and scientific advice on the health effects of ionising and non ionising radiation in the environment whether natural or manmade. Government departments will be represented by assessors. The secretariat will be provided jointly by our Department and the National Radiological Protection Board.

Its terms of reference are to:

"assess and advise Government on the health effects of natural and manmade radiation in the environment and to assess the adequacy of the available data and the need for further research."

The committee will provide the "designated body" with significant health representation recommended by the Black advisory group. In reaching decisions about discharges of radioactivity from nuclear sites and related activities on environmental monitoring the authorising departments will give full weight to medical advice from the committee. This will ensure, as recommended by the Black advisory group, that the control of permitted discharges takes account of all relevant factors.

One of its main tasks will be to advise on the results of the work which was recommended in Sir Douglas Black's report, and to consider the health implications of any research results or other information which becomes available. I will make a further announcement when the chairman and members have been appointed.

Pensions

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is available to him as to the number of persons in contracted-out pension schemes who are entitled to inflation-proofing of their pensions after retirement; and what information he has as to the estimated cost of this provision in the years (a) 1985, (b) 1990, (c) 1995, (d) 2000 and (e) 2010, both in money terms and as a proportion of the total cost of the state earnings-related pension scheme.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 7 May 1985, c. 339-40]: In the year ending 5 April 1983 approximately 9·8 million people paid some contributions at contracted-out rates.

The estimated cost of inflation-proofing the guaranteed minimum pension (GMP) portion of contracted-out occupational pensions is as follows:

Year	£ million*
1985-86	30
1990-91	130
1995-96	400
2000-01	800

*Expressed in terms of 1984-85 earnings. In each year the estimated costs are 20-25 per cent. of the total cost of the state earnings-related pension scheme.

The future cost of inflation proofing GMPs depends crucially on the assumptions about future levels of inflation. The above figures are based on the assumptions underlying the figures in the Green Paper "Reform of Social Security". The main assumptions are given in annex B of paper 2 in volume 3.

Social Security Review

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why he has not published the findings of the research commissioned from Social and Community Planning Research into child benefit in the background papers to the "Green Paper on the "Reform of Social Security."

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 13 June 1985, c. 560]: We did not publish this survey because of the decision to incorporate in Volume 3 of the Social Security Green Paper an extensive summary of the much wider survey conducted by Gallup of public attitudes to social security issues, including child benefit. We also arranged for the publication by Gallup of the complete survey.

The study by Social and Community Planning Research (SCPR) was of a more limited character, involving group discussions and interviews with only 104 people, and was designed to give an indication of attitudes rather than statistical evidence. It did not therefore attempt any statistical analyses, though its findings on child benefit are consistent with those of the Gallup survey.

We have no objection to SCPR making the survey available if they wish; and in view of the hon. Member's interest I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library as soon as it is available.

Great Ormond Street Hospital (Cardiac Block)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest estimated cost and completion date of the works to make safe the cardiac block at Great Ormond Street hospital for sick children.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 27 June 1985, c. 483]: The estimated final cost is within the current approved sum of £12·5 million. The present forecast completion date is 18 August 1986.

Benefit Changes

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many households will receive reduced housing benefit as a result of the changes to take effect on 25 November if they have (a) a pensioner, (b) a disabled person, (c) an unemployed person or (d) a young person up to 21 years, employed and unemployed, non-dependant, living with them; how much each one will lose; and how many households will lose benefit completely.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 8 July 1985, c. 367]: I regret that an assessment of the work involved in providing this information has shown that it would entail disproportionate cost.

Tobacco Sachets

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information is available to him about the medical effects of the sale, promotion and consumption of Skoal Bandit tobacco sachets in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) why the Chief Medical Officer has written to all doctors about the dangers of sucking tobacco contained in a sachet; and if he will make a statement;

(3) If he has yet reached a voluntary agreement with the producers of Skoal Bandits on the marketing of the product; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1985]: The Chief Medical Officer wrote to doctors following a recommendation by the Department's committee on carcinogenicity, which considered that there was evidence that the use of non-smoked tobacco products within the mouth is causally associated with an increased risk of oral cancer. In his letter he advised that these products should not be used either by smokers trying to give up smoking, or by non-smokers because of the risk to health. The Government reached agreement with the manufacturers in April to restrict the marketing of Skoal Bandits. A copy of the agreement has been placed in the Library.

Treatment Complaints

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he intends to take to ensure that the cases of complaints of ill-treatment to elderly and physically and mentally-handicapped patients mentioned in the annual report of the Health Service Commissioner are thoroughly investigated.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: We require health authorities to prepare a report at the time of any accident or other worrying incident and require authorities to investigate all complaints or incidents thoroughly, fairly and promptly. Health authorities may be called before the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration to answer for their actions in cases investigated by the Health Service Commissioner. We study all the cases reported and consider whether we should give further guidance to all authorities in the light of them.

Urgent Needs Payments

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people received urgent needs payments in 1984 in each of (a) the London borough of Camden (b) the London borough of Barnet (c) Greater London, and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1985]: The information requested is collected on a local office basis; as local office boundaries are not conterminous with local authorities or parliamentary constituencies, the information is not available in the form requested. The figures show the total number of urgent need decisions made by local offices serving any part of the areas in question in the year up to 9 April 1985.

Offices serving	Single payments*	Awards for living expenses
London borough of Camden	538	4,270
London borough of Barnet	4	879
Greater London council area	3,097	46,769
Constituency of Holborn and St. Pancras	487	10,933

* These figures include awards and refusals.

Supplementary Single Payments

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single payments were made to residents of (a) Camden (b) Barnet (c) Greater London, and (d) Holborn and St. Pancras in 1984, and what was the average payment in each case.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1985]: The information requested is collected on a local office basis; as local office boundaries are not conterminous with local authority boundaries or parliamentary constituencies, the information is not available in the form requested.

The figures show the total number of single payments awarded by local offices serving any part of the areas in question in the year up to 9 April 1985.

Offices serving	Number of Single Payments*	Average amount of payments (rounded) £
London borough of Camden	19,932	103·00
London borough of Barnet	6,919	98·50
Greater London council area	283,764	92·50
Constituency of Holborn and St. Pancras	21,309	111·50

* Some claimants receive more than one payment.

WALES

Housing Subsidy

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the percentage change in the level of housing subsidy to local authorities in Wales between 1979-80 and 1984-85 in real and cash terms.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The level of housing subsidies paid to local authorities in Wales has reduced by 88 per cent. between 1979-80 and 1984-85. This represents a reduction of 92 per cent. in real terms.

Refuse Collection

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many and which councils in Wales operate a refuse disposal collection through contracts with private companies.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No waste disposal authorities in Wales operate a refuse collection service exclusively through contracts with the private sector. Carmarthen district, Blaenau Gwent, and Merthyr borough councils operate a partial collection service under contract with private companies. A wide variety of contractual relationships exist for some aspects of waste disposal.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average wage rate among young people participating in youth training scheme programmes in mid-Glamorgan and the Caerphilly constituency respectively.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: A standard allowance of £26·25 per week is currently paid to all participants in the youth training scheme. Information is not available on the extent to which in addition sponsors may be subsidising this allowance.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of young people leaving youth training scheme programmes in mid-Glamorgan and the Caerphilly constituency, respectively, find permanent employment at the latest available date.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information is only available at Manpower Service Commission area office level. The results of a sample survey of youngsters who left youth training schemes in mid and south Glamorgan between July and September 1984 showed that 44 per cent. went into full-time employment.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the cost of the youth training scheme in mid-Glamorgan and the constituency of Caerphilly, respectively, in each year since its inception.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The information is only available at Manpower Services Commission area office level. The operational cost of the youth training scheme excluding administration in mid and south Glamorgan is as follows:

	£ million
1983-84	6·641
1984-85	14·553
*1985-86	3·924

* To end June.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the take-up rate among relevant age groups of the youth training scheme in mid-Glamorgan and the Caerphilly constituency, respectively.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: It is not possible, given the difficulty of defining the potential client population to give accurate take-up rates. The Manpower Service Commission's programme for 1985-86 estimates that 4,195 16-year-olds, 537 17-year-olds and 192 older youngsters will enter the youth training scheme in mid-Glamorgan. By the end of June, 1,059 16-year-olds and 28 17-year-olds had entered the scheme. No older youngsters were undergoing training. Of those in training, 284 16-year-olds and 4 17-year-olds were in the Rhymney Valley. No information is available for the Caerphilly constituency.

CIVIL SERVICE

Unified Grading

Mr. Hayes asked the Minister for the Civil Service what progress he has made in extending unified grading in the Civil Service; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: At the beginning of last year a major simplification of the pay and grading structure in the senior management levels of the Civil Service took place with the introduction of unified grading down to the senior principal level (grade 6).

After careful examination, the Government have concluded that it would be right and worthwhile to extend unified grading to the principal level. This would remove formal demarcations between occupational groups, and make it easier to get the right people into the jobs for which they are best fitted, at a level at which it is particularly important to broaden experience and develop senior management talent.

The new unified grade 7 will contain over 11,000 staff who are currently in some 100 different grades. The positions of fringe bodies which normally follow Civil Service practice will again be considered on their merits.

The unions will be fully consulted about the implementation of this change and a good deal of preparatory work will need to be done. The Government hope, however, that it will be possible to implement this significant further reform by the end of the year. The necessary cost of aligning the pay of the grades concerned, including appropriate transitional arrangements, will be met from within Departments' planned public expenditure provisions.

THE ARTS

Acceptances in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts whether he will now make a statement regarding Her Majesty's Government's policy for payment in lieu of tax on works of art.

Mr. Waldegrave: As my right hon. and noble Friend the Minster for the Arts indicated in another place on 24 April, the Government have looked again at the arrangements whereby provision for acceptance in lieu is carried on the votes of the OAL and DOE. We have concluded that a basic provision of £2 million a year for acceptance in lieu should continue as at present, for the ordinary run of smaller cases. But recognising the difficulty of absorbing the unpredictable cost of large and important offers within a fixed annual provision, we intend in future that there should be recourse to the pubic expenditure Reserve, over and above the basic acceptance in lieu provision, for such cases when this is justified on merits.

The continuance of the basic provision does not indicate an absolute limit on what may be accepted in any one year. The Government will therefore also give the most serious consideration to all offers made, where they cannot be funded from the basic provision, provided that in the judgment of heritage Ministers and their expert advisers the heritage items on offer are of national importance so that a call on the Reserve may be merited. It will therefore be possible to accommodate these items in future without imposing an offsetting reduction in or detriment to the rest of the arts budget.

It is not possible to give an exact estimate of what might be accepted on such a basis in any one year, as too many unpredictables are involved. Looking simply at recent and current levels of acceptance in lieu offers, we would expect to call on the Reserve for around £10 million or so a year, taking one year with another. My right hon. and noble Friend emphasises strongly that this is an estimate; it is neither a target nor a limit, as in any given year the demand could be either less or more. He believes however that this arrangement will allow the intentions of the acceptance in lieu scheme to be given proper effect.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts whether the Government plan to make any changes in the rules governing the handling of income generated by national museums and galleries.

Mr. Waldegrave: As foreshadowed in its observations (Cmnd. 9127) on the Eighth Report, Session 1981-82, from the Education, Science and Arts Committee, the Government have reviewed the present system for the treatment of revenue generated by the nine national museums and galleries funded from the arts and libraries programme.

Broadly speaking, under the present system, an estimate is prepared of the gross provision to be made for each institution for its general running costs in the coming financial year; another estimate is made of the likely level of its receipts; and the second is subtracted from the first to produce the net vote provision. If the institution earns more than the expected receipts, it may spend the excess provided that it does so before the end of the financial year. Any excess money then remaining unspent must however be surrendered to the Exchequer. It may be "revoted" to the institution in a later year, but such revotes have to be met from within the arts and libraries programme determined for that year.

The Government intends to change this system to provide greater incentives for the national museums and galleries both to maximise their receipts (whether by the operations of their vote-financed trading activities such as shops, by charging for admission where appropriate, or in other ways) and to use these more effectively. This also should improve the institutions' ability to respond flexibly to the needs of their visitors, in hours opening and other things.

My right hon. and noble Friend shall consult the nine national museums and galleries for which he is responsible in the course of the Parliamentary Recess about proposals for a new system. The main features of these proposals are:

(a) a change from direct vote provision to grant-in-aid. The institutions will be able to carry over unspent balances at the end of the financial year within normal grant-in-aid rules;

(b) a new method of determining future annual grants, whereby the Government will in effect provide a given percentage of each institution's assessed running costs, and the institution will be expected to find the balance by its own efforts;

(c) acceptance by the Government that any receipts which an institution generates for itself, over and above its own target balance, will within normal grant-in-aid rules accrue to the benefit of the institution and will not be offset by any reduction in the amount of the Government grant for the year.

These changes should markedly improve the ability of the institutions to help themselves. When the consultations are complete, my right hon. and noble Friend will present his detailed proposals to Parliament. It will be his aim to introduce new arrangements at the start of the earliest practicable financial year, subject to any legislative or other administrative measures that may be necessary.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Salaries

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing present salaries of all those officers of the House of Commons and the House of Lords who will receive increases following acceptance of the Top Salaries Review Board proposals, showing the increases in each case.

Mr. Biffen: The present salaries of those officers of the House of Commons and the House of Lords who correspond to Civil Service Grades 1, 2 and 3 are as follows:

Department/Staff	Present salary £	Corresponding Civil Service grade
House of Lords
Clerk of the Parliaments*	45,500	Grade 1

Department/Staff	Present salary £	Corresponding Civil Service grade
Second Counsel to Chairman of Committees, Reading Clerk, Principal Clerks (3)	30,865	Grade 3
Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod	29,095	Grade 3
House of Commons
2 Speaker's Counsel	30,865	Grade 3
Clerk of the House*	45,500	Grade 1
Clerk Assistant*	36,500	Grade 2
Clerk of Committees*	36,500	Grade 2
6 Principal Clerks-Grade 1	30,865	Grade 3
Serjeant at Arms	30,865	Grade 3
Librarian	30,865	Grade 3
Head of Administration Department	30,865	Grade 3

Note:

All salaries shown include £1,365 p.a. inner London weighting except those marked *.

The Treasury is currently promulgating the revised salaries for these grades and information will be available on request from the Libraries of both Houses in due course. Implementation of a Civil Service pay award for House of Commons staff would be made automatically under pay linkage arrangements agreed in 1954; formal authorisation of rates of pay for Officers of the House of Lords is a matter for the House of Lords Offices Committee.

Official Opposition (Public Funds)

Mr. Beith asked the Lord Privy Seal (1) by how much the amounts disbursed from public funds to the official Opposition in the form of benefits in kind, such as office machinery, postal services, telecommunications and travel have been increased in each of the last five years;

(2) whether, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on 15 July, he will specify what office machinery, postal services, telecommunications, travel and other benefits are included in the annual sums of £1,747 and £53,970 provided for the official Opposition from public funds.

Mr. Biffen [pursuant to his reply, 18 July 1985, c. 226]: The detail of the costs which have been incurred in providing services to the Official Opposition during 1984-85 is as follows:

Use of the Government car service	31,458.20
House of Commons
Office machinery, comprising: Ronescan Model 480 stencil cutter	861.51
Hire charges relating to Xerox photocopier	885.32
Cost of posting the Whip	8,908.32
House of Lords
Cost of posting the Whip	13,157.72
Telephone rental charges (2 lines—222 3948/8663)	171.66
Telephone call charges (2 lines—222 3948/8663)	274.09

Despite an extensive search it is not possible, without employing disproportionate administrative effort, to provide, in total, the costs of these services in earlier years. What has been identified are the costs of using the Government car service and the costs of telecommunications.

These were:

	1981-82 £	1982-83 £	1983-84 £
Government car service	21,320	23,920	28,600
Telecommunications	364	494	623

Famine Aid

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the tonnage and value of cereals which have been exported to famine areas from Great Britain during the past year; and what proportion of those exports was provided by (a) the national aid programme, (b) voluntary and charitable aid and (c) aid from the European Economic Community.

Mr. Raison: My Department does not keep records of the amounts of cereals provided to famine areas as food aid by voluntary and charitable organisations, nor of commercial exports. The tonnages and value of cereals procured in Britain as food aid for famine areas under the British bilateral aid programme and by the European Community are as follows:

Procurement in United Kingdom: October 1984—July 1985

	Quantity (Tonnes) (Wheat equivalent)	Approximate value f.o.b. (£ million)
United Kingdom	52,300	5·6
European Community	11,820	1·5

As well as the quantities of food aid procured in the United Kingdom under the bilateral aid programme, 74,500 tonnes of cereals (wheat equivalent) have been purchased for the same areas from other sources at a cost of £9·7 million.

St. Helena (Salary Review)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the last salary review on St. Helena took place; and if the salary commissioners' recommendations were implemented in full.

Mr. Raison: A salaries commissioner visited St. Helena from 25 October to 7 December 1984. His main recommendations concerning the introduction of a new key scale for salaries and a salaries award have been implemented, the effective date being 1 January 1985. The St. Helena Government are following up the more detailed recommendations about the structure and conditions of service of the public sector.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the average increase in public sector pay as a result of the last general salary review on St. Helena.

Mr. Raison: The average increase in public sector pay as a result of the 1984 salaries review was 21·8 per cent.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how frequently it is intended to conduct salary reviews on St. Helena in the future.

Mr. Raison: Future reviews of public service salaries will form part of the annual budgetary aid reviews.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the effects of the last salary review on St. Helena on the uprating of social welfare benefits.

Mr. Raison: Social welfare benefits have increased by 15 per cent. with effect from 1 January 1985.

RMS St. Helena

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he is taking to improve conditions for fare-paying passengers on the crossing by the RMS St. Helena between St. Helena and Ascension Island.

Mr. Raison: I understand that the St. Helena Shipping Company is doing all it can to provide the best possible facilities on the RMS St. Helena, at a time of exceptionally high passenger demand on the inter-island service between Ascension Island and St. Helena. It is anticipated that the level of demand will decline after the next two or three voyages, as major construction work on Ascension Island is completed.

Overseas Aid

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give a table setting out the total United Kingdom overseas aid to the African continent for each year since 1975 in cash and constant prices.

Mr. Raison: The information requested is as follows:

Gross public expenditure on aid and bilateral aid to African continent
Current and constant 1984 prices
(using the United Kingdom GDP deflator)

Year	Current prices £000's	Constant 1984 prices £000's
1975	79,198	207,303
1976	107,336	244,860
1977	116,472	233,299
1978	176,698	318,493
1979	230,661	362,980
1980	256,965	337,652
1981	266,758	313,524
1982	247,161	271,093
1983	235,538	245,438
1984	265,769	265,769

Mr. Gorst asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to increase United Kingdom aid to underdeveloped countries for 1985-86 by an amount sufficient to match increases made by other European countries and to meet the United Nations' target of 0·76 per cent. of gross national product.

Mr. Raison: The allocation for 1985-86 remains as published in the 1985 White Paper on Public Expenditure at £1,130 million.

Mr. Gorst asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the United Kingdom's total expenditure on overseas aid as a proportion of gross national product in 1984-85; and what information he has as to the equivalent figures for the Netherlands, France and Norway, respectively.

Mr. Raison: The OECD publish figures of donors' aid performance on a calendar year basis. The figure for the United Kingdom in 1984 expressed as a percentage of GNP was 0·33 per cent. For technical reasons there are fluctuations in donors' aid performances unrelated to changes in actual aid expenditure. In aid spending terms the figure for 1984 was 0·35 per cent. This was the same as for 1983 and is close to the OECD average of 0·36 per cent. Equivalent figures for the Netherlands in 1984 are 1·02 per cent., France 0·77 per cent. (including aid to the Dependencies) and Norway 0·99 per cent.

Mr. Gorst asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his latest estimate of the outturn on overseas aid expenditure for 1985-86; and what change in real terms this represents in comparison with the outturn figures for 1984-85.

Mr. Raison: The sum available for spending on the aid programme in 1985-86 is £1,205 million. This compares with a provisional outturn figure of £1,165 million in 1984-85. What change in cost terms this would represent depends on the rate of inflation over the rest of the year.

Famine Relief

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it remains the intention of the European Council to deliver 1,200,000 tons of food to the drought-stricken nations of northern and east Africa as was decided at the European Council in Milan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: It is of course the Community's intention to deliver the full 1·2 million tonnes of cereals or cereal equivalent pledged at the European Council in Dublin as rapidly as possible. But we have to take account of the congestion at the ports in the countries concerned. Together with other donors we are making every effort to improve internal distribution so that we can get the food moving more rapidly from the ports.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EC (Joint Venture Programmes)

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list European Economic Community joint venture industrial programmes and itemise the financial contribution from the United Kingdom to each programme in (a) the last five years and (b) the last 10 years.

Mr. Channon: There are no community industrial programmes of the type described in the question.

Aid and Trade

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will revise the Government's policy on initiation within the aid and trade provision to enable the United Kingdom to initiate on all possible projects rather than attempt to match competitive terms already offered by other countries.

Mr. Channon: There is no initiation in suitable cases on the Government initiating within the aid and trade provision but, within limited resources, we must also retain scope to match the aid offers of competitors which could undermine the ability of our companies to win on merit.

Korea

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to what extent United Kingdom garment, fabric, textile, and clothing exports to Korea are limited by import bans.

Mr. Channon: A variety of yarns, woven fabrics of wool and other animal hair, carpets and silk garments are still restricted import items in the Republic of Korea, and in these cases an import licence is only issued against a certificate of import recommendation from the designated Korean trade association or Ministry. The Korean authorities intend to remove a further range of these goods from the list of restricted items in July 1986.

Chemists (Retail Price Maintenance)

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to abolish retail price maintenance for chemists.

Mr. Fletcher: No. Under the resale prices legislation, the Director-General of Fair Trading must demonstrate prima facie evidence of a material change in the relevant circumstances before he may apply to the restrictive practices court to review its judgment exempting ethical and proprietary pharmaceuticals from the general ban on resale price maintenance.

Steel

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the figures for the consumption of steel in the United Kingdom since 1979; and what is the estimate for 1985-86.

Mr. Butcher: The available information is as follows:

United Kingdom consumption of finished steel products

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the latest figures for crude steel production and effective capacity for European Economic Community countries plus Japan, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America.

Mr. Butcher: The available information is as follows:

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will give the latest figures for employment costs per tonne of steel produced by the British Steel Corporation and the index of wholesale prices for steel in dollar terms.

Mr. Butcher: The British Steel Corporation's total employment costs were £50 per tonne of liquid steel in the financial year 1984-85. The index of producer prices for iron and steel in dollar terms was 92 in June 1985, based on 1980 = 100.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will give the latest figures for finished steel imports as a percentage of total deliveries to the United Kingdom market for (a) rods and bars, (b) wire rods, (c) other light rolled sections, (d) heavy rails, (e) other heavy rolled products, (f) plates, (g) sheets, (h) hot rolled strip, (i) cold rolled strip, (j) template and (k) tubes and pipes.

Product Liability

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made on the draft European Commission directive on product liability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: The directive on the approximation of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions of all member states concerning liability for defective products was adopted yesterday by the Council of Ministers. I am very pleased that this long awaited measure of harmonisation and consumer protection has now been agreed. The directive was held up for several years over disagreements between member states about the "development risks" or "state of the art" defence, and financial limts on liability. But a package has now been agreed which allows us to introduce the regime we have been seeking to secure for so long. There will be a development risks defence but no total limit on liability, and although member states will be able to adopt different positions on these two points, the directive as a whole represents a very significant step towards harmonisation of European law in this field.

We must now implement the directive within three years, which we shall do after full consultations with all concerned. In ten years' time the operation of the directive will be reviewed to see if there is a need for even closer harmonisation.

Regional Grants (Grimsby)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what sums were paid in regional development grants to firms in the Grimsby travel-to-work area in each year since 1977.

Mr. Trippier: Payments of £25,000 or less under the old regional development grant scheme cannot be attributed to any unit smaller than a planning region. Grimsby travel-to-work area is not eligible for the new RDG scheme which was introduced on 29 November 1984. The totals of payments of regional development grant of over £25,000 in respect of assets on premises in the Grimsby travel-to-work area since 1977 are given in the following table.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the total public expenditure incurred by each member state of the European Economic Community in support of the promotion and maintenance of overseas trade.

Mr. Channon: Information is not available to permit precise and reliable comparisons. The evidence suggests, however, that the range of services available to exporters through the British Overseas Trade Board are broadly comparable with those available to our European competitors.

COCOM (Agreements)

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (a) what proportion of British exports are based on technology covered by the new COCOM agreements and (b) what percentage of such exports are based on research carried out or funded by United States institutions or corporations; and what estimates he has made for changes in the proportions of (a) and (b) above in each of the next three years.

Mr. Channon: The information is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate costs.

Information Technology

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the National Economic Development Office about the statistical base used by his Department for the study of the information technology industry; and what reply he is making.

Mr. Butcher: I am unaware of any such representations by the National Economic Development Office.

British Overseas Trade Board (South Africa)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, in the light of the imposition of emergency powers in South Africa, he will review the policy of supporting through the British Overseas Trade Board trade missions to South Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: BOTB support for trade missions to South Africa continues to be available, as elsewhere.

Paper and Board

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the quantities of exports of paper and board from the United Kingdom to the rest of the European Economic Community in 1983 and 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: The United Kingdom exported 248,000 metric tonnes of paper and board to the rest of the European Community in 1983, and 310,000 metric tonnes in 1984. (Source: SITC/R2 Group 641, less Sub-group 641.6 and Item 641.97, in the UK Overseas Trade Statistics.)

Sumrie Clothes plc

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to the answer of 23 July, when he expects to be in a position to announce whether any action is to be taken in respect of alleged breaches of the Companies Act by Sumrie Clothes plc of Leeds.

Mr. Fletcher: As soon as possible.

Pharmaceuticals (Patents)

Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he proposes to take to seek to restore the effective patent life of pharmaceutical products; what action he intends to take to stimulate the innovative sector of the pharmaceutical industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: A paper setting out the pharmaceutical industry's case for extending the patent life of pharmaceutical products has been referred to the Government's Standing Advisory Committee on Patents to obtain the views of industry generally. We are also seeking the views of the Department of Health and Social Security. As to other action that might be taken to stimulate the innovative sector of the pharmaceutical industry, this is primarily a matter for my colleagues in the Department of Health and Social Security which sponsors the pharmaceutical industry.

Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the pharmaceutical industry relating to the licensing of right provisions of the Patents Act 1977; why the United Kingdom position remains different from the European Community matters in the context of the European patent convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: A paper has been received from the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry on the issue of licence of right provisions of the Patents Act 1977.

The European patent convention provides for a patent term of 20 years. The 1977 Act brought United Kingdom patent law into line by providing the same term for patents granted under this Act. As a transitional provision, the 1977 Act extended the patent term entitlement of patents granted under the previous (1949) Patents Act from 16 to 20 years. However, during the extended period, 1949 Act patents are subject to licences of right to cater for competitors who had made plans on the basis that they would be free to use the inventions at the end of the 16-year term.

Tractors

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what information he has as to the percentage share of the tractor market held by Japanese imports in each of the member states of the EEC other than the United Kingdom;

(2) what was the percentage of imports of tractors contributed by Japanese imports to (a) Europe (EEC) and (b) the United Kingdom over the last years for which records are kept;

(3) what information he has as to the percentage share of the European tractor market currently held by Japanese imports.

Mr. Channon: Information on the total home markets is not available. Figures in respect of the import markets are in the table.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the percentage share of the tractor market held by Japanese imports in each of the European Economic Community member countries over the last 10 years;

(2) what is the percentage share of the British tractor market held by Japanese imports.

Mr. Channon: The share of the United Kingdom market was about 2 per cent. by value, in the year ending June 1984, the latest period for which there are figures. Information for other European Community countries is not available and figures for the United Kingdom market in earlier years are not immediately obtainable.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the percentage of the Japanese market for tractors held by (a) British imports to Japan, (b) other European imports and (c) United States imports.

Mr. Channon: Data on the Japanese market (including home production) are not available. The shares of Japanese imports are in the table.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current level of tariffs on Japanese tractor imports into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Channon: The rates of customs duty chargeable in 1985 on imports of tractors from Japan are:

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the current level of tariff on British exports of tractors into the Japanese market.

Mr. Channon: The bulk of British tractors imported into Japan are free of duty, the exception being those of four wheeled type road tractors with nominal horse power less than 50 hp not for agricultural use, which carry a duty of 5·8 per cent.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what occasions in the last 10 years United Kingdom Ministers have discussed Japanese agricultural machinery tractor exports to the United Kingdom and EEC with Japanese ministers.

Mr. Channon: This information is not available in the form requested but in recent years British Ministers have had frequent contacts with Japanese Ministers on a variety of topics.

Japan (Imports)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what regular formal channels exist for discussing Japanese import levels into the United Kingdom with Japanese Government representatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: There are frequent discussions at Ministerial and official level between the United Kingdom and Japanese authorities, as well as regular talks between the European Community and Japan, on all aspects of our trade relations, including the trade imbalance.

Korean Goods (Fraudulent Marketing)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make representations to the Government of the United States of America seeking measures to prevent the Union Jack being used as a trade-mark and advertising logo for goods made in South Korea and marketed in the United States of America.

Mr. Pattie: Under the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, the United States of America and Republic of Korea are obliged to prohibit the use of national flags as trade marks without authorisation. If the hon. Member is able to provide specific instances of such use of the Union Jack, officials will take appropriate action.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make representations to the Government of the United States of America about measures to prevent South Korean goods being fraudulently marketed in the United States of America as having been made in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Channon: In cases where South Korean goods are known to be fraudulently marketed as having been made in the United Kingdom representations are made to the Korean authorities. If there were known to be cases arising of such goods being sold in the United States of America the United States authorities would also be alerted.

Austrian Wine

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the total annual imports of Austrian table wines for sale in Britain in each of the last five years.

Mr. Channon: Available information relating to United Kingdom imports of wine from Austria is as follows:

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
Value £000s (cif)	488	583	502	558	635
Volume (thousand litres)	935	1,048	867	970	909

Radio Investigation Service

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the review of the radio investigation service has been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: The review of the radio investigation service has now been completed and the consequent action document has been agreed. The review was thorough and detailed—containing 128 separate recommendations. A copy is being placed in the Library of both Houses.

The recommendations have been almost entirely accepted, a few with minor qualifications. Many of the recommendations on improving procedure and management control have already been implemented and action on the balance is well under way. A few which had broad application outside the RIS have been taken up in wider reviews of specific aspects of the work of the radio regulatory division of the Department of Trade and Industry. These relate to the organisation of international work and the division's outstations.

I am glad to say that as a result of the changes recommended more resources will be devoted to dealing with pollution of the radio spectrum by those who operate without licences and those who abuse their licence conditions. The staff of the RIS have already begun to step up enforcement action in this field and much more will follow. I strongly urge all those who may currently be operating without a licence or without proper regard to their licence conditions to put their position right as soon as possible. The penalties are severe and it is often necessary to seize and obtain equipment as evidence for prosecution. Moreover the penalty may not be of a once and for all nature. We do revoke the licences of people who persistently cause a nuisance to other radio users.

This increased enforcement activity will be undertaken by a RIS staff of 240 compared with 340 before the Department took over the running of the RIS. The reduction has been largely managed by recruiting only selectively to replace staff who elected to stay with BT and by natural wastage. The switch in resources to enforcement will be achieved by a phased withdrawal from the time-consuming and largely fruitless effort currently put into dealing with domestic TV and radio reception problems. The majority of cases of this sort dealt with by the RIS involve sets lacking adequate immunity, improperly tuned or maintained sets or are cases where an external aerial is lacking or of poor quality or where the reception problems are so intermittent as not to be observed by the RIS. In none of these cases can the RIS effect a cure although they can sometimes tell the complainant what his problem is and how it could be cured. Often people have had to wait many weeks for a visit an they are understandably unhappy when told that fault lies with their equipment an that they need to contact their dealer, manufacturer or service engineer.

The review committee recommends a number of steps to deal with the issue and I have decided as follows:

1. The Department will publish a comprehensive booklet with full colour illustrations enabling most people to carry out simply and safe diagnosis of their domestic TV or radio reception problems. There will be a technical section for TV dealers and repairers. The booklet will be available from post offices in about three weeks time.

2. BS 905 which provides minimum immunity standards for TV will be incorporated in legally binding regulations as soon as possible. This will make it an offence to sell, manufacture, or import TVs which do not comply with the standard.

3. With immediate effect a call-out charge of £21 will have to be paid before the RIS will pay a visit to diagnose the cause of domestic TV or radio reception problems. Requests received by post bearing a postmark of today's date or earlier will not attract this charge.

4. In addition visits will not be made unless the apparatus has an external aerial and a log of reception problems has been completed as required by the existing form used when requesting a visit from the RIS. A revised version of this form will be included with the new booklet.

5. I propose to copy the names and addresses of all those seeking assistance with TV reception problems to the National TV Licence and Record Office; I do not believe that any service at all should be offered to those who pay no licence fee.

6. With effect from 1 Janaury 1987 the RIS will only pay a visit to deal with domestic TV and radio reception problems when such a visit can be combined with other journeys and a dealer has provided a written report stating that he has been unable to effect a remedy.

7. With effect from 1 January 1988 (or one year after regulations have been made on BS 905) the RIS will only visit to diagnose reception problems caused to sets which comply with that standard.

8. With immediate effect, all business and service users will be charged a commercial rate for RIS advice and remedial work on their radio communications systems other than that related to RIS enforcement responsibilities.

In the short time the RIS has been incorporated in the Department I have been impressed by the vigour and efficiency the staff has shown in cleaning up the airwaves on a number of radio bands. I am confident that they will soon have a significant impact on the problems experienced by business users of radio.

I also believe that the best interests of the domestic users of TV and radio will be served by making available the new booklet which will help them diagnose their problems and by handing over this category of work to the private sector where it belongs. I hope that TV and radio repair businesses and manufacturers will take up the opportunity to provide an improved service to the consumer. My officials will be discussing this with appropriate trade organisations.

The RIS will be happy to organise training sessions to the trade on TV and radio reception problems when there is any significant demand.

Domestic Cookers

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made on making regulations to limit the maximum outside temperature of domestic gas and electric cookers.

Mr. Fletcher: In reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon on 2 May, I said that I intended to have regulations ready in draft in June. This has not proved possible but discussions with industry, consumer and medical interests have led to a measure of agreement on the content of the proposed regulations and regulations will be laid before the House at the first possible opportunity.

Wide Area Paging

Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has received the Director-General of Oftel's advice on the future of bands I and III and on wide area paging; what conclusions he has reached in the light of this advice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie [pursuant to his reply, 28 June 1985, c. 506]: Both my Department and Oftel have received a number of representations about the difficulties faced by prospective applicants for trunked private mobile radio networks in band III in completing their applications by the original deadlines.

I am anxious that no time should be lost in establishing pmr services in band III but it would be wrong to ignore the comments that have been received. In the circumstances I have consulted the Director-General of Telecommunications and he has agreed to extend the period for receiving applications for national trunked pmr services to 1 October 1985 and for trunked pmr services in the London area to 1 November 1985. The Director-General of Telecommunications will still make his recommendations to me on national trunked pmr services by the end of the year. For the services in London he will make his recommendations by 1 February 1986. The date for making applications to my Department for local trunked pmr networks outside London will also be put back to 1 November.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Senior Lecturer Post

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has discussed with the University Grants Committee the recognition of the senior lecturer post as the career grade in universities.

Mr. Brooke: No.

Maintained Schools

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest available cost of employing teachers in maintained schools as a proportion of (a) total costs of such schools and (b) total costs excluding capital expenditure; and what were the comparable figures five and 10 years previously.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is given in the following table:

Expenditure on the salaries of teaching staff in schools—England*

	As a percentage of total net recurrent and Capital expenditure on schools Per cent.	As a percentage of total net recurrent expenditure on schools Per cent.
1973-74	49·5	65·3
1978-79	56·5	63·6
1983-84	59·9	66·1

* Salaries include employers' contributions to National Insurance and Superannuation.

Finer Committee Report

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the latest position as regards the implementation by his Department of the recommendations which affect its responsibilities of the report of the Finer committee on one-parent families.

Mr. Dunn: There is no recommendation in the report on which action remains outstanding for the Department.

16 and 17-year-olds

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children aged 16 and 17 years are currently in the labour market and how many are (a) being educated and (b) under youth training schemes and so on.

Sir Keith Joseph: I shall write to the hon. Member.

British Youth Council

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the present composition of the British Youth Council, the organisations represented and the number of delegates each has to the council; and if he will publish details of the involvement of youth sections of political parties in the British Youth Council.

Mr. Dunn: Details of organisations in membership of the British Youth Council at the last council meeting in March this year, together with the number of delegates each was entitled to send to that meeting are set out as follows, divided into three categories, non political organisations, local youth councils and party political organisations.

Hearing-Impaired Children

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether, following the announcement of the intention to consider regional and national planning in relation to the educational provision for hearing-impaired children, support for this exercise has been forthcoming from national voluntary organisations and local education authorities;

(2) why the discussion document "Provision for Hearing-Impaired Children in Special Schools," about regional and national planning, was restricted to a consideration of special schools;

(3) if he will make it his policy to consider plans for the development of special school provision, for the deaf within the context of the overall pattern of special educational provision;

(4) if he has considered the recommendations made by the Royal National Institute for the Deaf in regard to the planning of educational provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The responsibility for securing the provision of sufficient and suitable schools for their area lies with the individual local education authorities. In this instance, the Department initiated consultations because there are so few special schools for deaf and partially hearing pupils that some national co-ordination was needed. By involving the individual local authorities, regional conferences and voluntary bodies, it was possible to take account of local developments in special education other than in the special schools. My right hon. Friend is grateful to all the bodies which have co-operated so willingly over the past three years.

The document submitted on 20 May 1985 by the Royal National Institute for the Deaf makes a number of suggestions which go well beyond the scope of the present consultation. My right hon. Friend will certainly take account of its comments in coming to conclusions about the future organisation of special schools.

Wages and Salaries

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give details of the changes which have taken place within (a) Stockport education authority, (b) Manchester education authority, and (c) local education authorities as a whole between 1978 and the last year for which figures are available in respect of (i) the total number of teaching staff employed and the wages bill in respect of such staff and (ii) the total number of non-teaching staff employed and the wages bill in respect of such staff.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not collect information about the number of non-teaching staff employed by local education authorities. The other information that has been requested is given in the following table:

	Stockport LEA	Manchester LEA	England
Number of teachers
as at January 1979	2,672	5,786	459,516
as at January 1984	2,627	4,768	430,109
Teachers' Salaries (1983-84 Real Terms)
1978-79 (£ million)	26·97	59·04	4,619·4
1983-84 (£ million)	28·40	52·22	4,751·5
Non-teaching Staff Salaries (1983-84 Real Terms)
1978-79 (£ million)	3·97	12·32	814·77
1983-84 (£ million)	4·00	11·93	840·12

Notes:

1. The figures refer to Nursery, Primary, Secondary and Special Schools.

2. 1983-84 Real terms are the cash figures for 1978-79 adjusted by the Gross Domestic Product at Market Price Deflator with 1983-84=100.

National Council for Educational Standards

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the National Council for Educational Standards falls within his Department's guidelines for grant purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Department has limited resources committed to providing grants for selected specific educational services and research, which are relevant to the development of the Government's educational policies. I announced last November the nature of research into the factors affecting standards in schools which the Department might be willing to fund if suitable proposals were submitted. The National Council for Educational Standards have not submitted a proposal in response to that announcement and have not received grant from the Department.

Migraine

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research his Department is currently sponsoring into the causes and treatment of migraine.

Mr. Brooke: The Medical Research Council (MRC), which receives its grant-in-aid through the Department, is the main Government agency for the promotion of medical research in the United Kingdom. I understand that the MRC is currently supporting five research projects on and relevant to migraine. The council is always willing to consider soundly based research proposals for support through its grants schemes in competition with other applicants.

In addition to the work supported by the MRC, research work on and relevant to migraine may also be conducted in universities and medical schools using funds allocated for teaching and research on the advice of the University Grants Committee but details of such work are not collected centrally.

"Reform of Social Security"

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what study his Department has made of the effects the proposals in the Green Paper concerning the reform of social security in respect of student eligibility for housing and other benefits will have on student take-up of places and wastage rates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend would not expect take-up or wastage rates to be affected by the implementation of the Green Paper proposals concerning the eligibility of students for housing and other benefits. These proposals are to be considered further by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services, and both our Departments will participate with other interested Departments in discussion of any measures involving students.

Curriculum

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire North-East of 16 July, whether he is satisfied that no local education authorities are currently levying charges for the participation in activities which constitute part of the school curriculum, in contravention of section 61(1) of the Education Act 1944.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has made it clear that all complaints about possible breaches of section 61 will be fully investigated. No such complaints in respect of action by LEAs are currently before the Department.

Deep Earth Sampling

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the answer of 8 July, Official Report, column 352, if he will list the sources from which the Natural Environment Research Council is seeking contributions towards the United Kingdom's subscription to full membership of the Joint Oceanographic Institutions for Deep Earth Sampling; what is Her Majesty's Government, policy towards the possibility of partially meeting the cost of the United Kingdom's subscription from public funds providing that a matching contribution can be obtained from other sources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: While discussions continue it would be inappropriate to give further details of sources being approached, beyond those already given. My right hon. Friend hopes that it will prove possible to put together enough money from the public and private sectors to enable the United Kingdom to become a full member of the ocean drilling programme.

Surrey, South-West

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much was spent per child in real terms in each of the last five years in primary and secondary schools in Surrey, South-West on (a) books, (b) maintenance and repair and (c) equipment.

Mr. Dunn: Separate information about the expenditure by areas within local education authorities is not available centrally. The information for Surrey, however, is set out in the table.

Unit Costs (£) real terms
Surrey

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average pupil to teacher ratio in primary and secondary schools for Surrey, South-West; and how this compares with the ratio during the last five years.

Mr. Dunn: Pupil/teacher ratios for south west Surrey are not available centrally. The pupil/teacher ratio in maintained primary and secondary schools in Surrey for the five years 1980 to 1984 are as follows:

Pupil/teacher ratios in maintained schools in Surrey

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
Primary* schools	21·7	21·4	22·2	22·1	22·5
Secondary* schools	16·3	16·3	16·5	16·4	16·4

* Including middle as deemed.

British Academy

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from employers regarding the adequacy of notice given by the British Academy of employees who are recipients of post-graduate awards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: None. The release of a particular student is a matter for the student to negotiate with the employer and with the university concerned. The distribution of studentships cannot be decided until the year's degree results are known.

School Meals

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many local education authorities have made the reduction in school meals costs which the Government's expenditure plans envisage.

Sir Keith Joseph: The Government's plans, framed in the light of the Education Act 1980, which gave local education authorities greater discretion over the service provided, envisaged a 35 per cent. reduction in cash expenditure on school meals between 1979-80 and 1983-84, the latest year for which out-turn figures are available. Five authorities have attained reductions in excess of that figure and several others have got close to it. They have achieved that result through a variety of measures, including efficiency savings, letting contracts to the private sector and exercising the discretion offered in the 1980 Act to provide meals only for those pupils to whom they are required to provide them free. If other local education authorities did more to make their school meals service cost-effective and to reduce its net cost, they would be able to maintain the standard of their education service at a lower cost to the rate-payer.

Universities (Funding)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East of 24 June, Official Report, columns 310-311, whether he will list in the Official Report the percentage changes in the funding of each university by the University Grants Committee, excluding those amounts representing compensation for changes in home student fees, compensation for redundancy and early retirement, changes to take account of minor capital works from the recurrent grant and changes in the level of local authority rates; and if he will provide similar information for the periods between 1980-81 and 1981-82 (a) including and (b) excluding these amounts.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 25 July 1985]: The percentage changes in the funding of each university by the University Grants Committee, excluding those amounts representing compensation for changes in the level of home student fees, compensation for redundancy and early retirement, provision for capital-in-recurrent expenditure and local authority rates for the periods 1981-82 to 1982-83 and 1982-83 to 1983-84 are given in columns (3) and (4) below. These figures also exclude additions made for the IT and new blood programmes. Similar information for the period 1980-81 to 1981-82 (a) including and (b) excluding these amounts is given in columns (1) and (2) below respectively. The percentage changes shown will in part reflect the withdrawal of the overseas student subsidy.

EMPLOYMENT

Abbeystead Explosion

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from the Health and Safety Executive about the Abbeystead explosion; what other comments he has received; what response he is making; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend and I have not received representations from the Health and Safety

Executive. We received a number of comments during the inquiry and before the executive's report was published but have received none since then. I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancaster (Mrs. Kellett-Bowman) on 7 February 1985 when the report was published.

Unemployed Persons (Registration)

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed people in Stockport and in Greater Manchester had registered details of their skill and experience at jobcentres at the most recent date for which the information is available: and what proportion those numbers represented of the total registered as unemployed.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 7 June 1985 there were 43,745 jobseekers registered at jobcentres in the greater Manchester metropolitan county of whom 994 were registered at the Stockport jobcentre. These figures include a small number of employed people seeking a change of employment. Unemployed people are no longer required to register at the jobcentre as a condition of claiming benefit; nor is it necessary to register for employment in order to use the jobcentre. It should not be assumed that these figures represent all the jobseekers in the area who are actively looking for work. Large numbers of jobseekers regularly use the self-service display areas from where 65 per cent. of the vacancies notified to jobcentres are filled.

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in Ealing, North and the London borough of Ealing and of the Greater London Council area had registered details of their skills and experience at jobcentres at the most recent date for which the information is available; what proportion of those numbers represented of the total registered as unemployed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall write to my hon. Friend shortly and will place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Fishermen (Redundancy)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of fishermen contributing to the redundancy fund in 1975, 1977, 1979, 1980, 1982 and 1983 and the minimum individual total of contributions in each year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I regret that this information is not available. It is only since April 1982 that any employee has contributed to the redundancy fund. The fund has for most of its existence been financed by an allocation from the secondary class 1 earnings-related contributions paid by employers in respect of employed earners. From April 1982 there has been an allocation from the employee's contribution. The amounts paid respectively by the employer and the employee are currently 0·15 per cent. and 0·25 per cent. of earnings. There are no figures which would enable contributions by fishermen to be analysed separately.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many fishermen have (a) been made redundant and (b) receive compensation for redundancy since 1 January 1982, by ports; and how many ex gratia payments have been made by his Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No information is available on the number of fishermen made redundant or of redundancy payments made to fishermen separately, either in aggregate or by port, before July 1984. An ex gratia payment was made in one case in January 1985.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the code of practice and instructions given to officials dealing with fisherman's redundancy cases in 1976, 1978, 1980, 1982 and 1984.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There have not been instructions relating specifically to fishermen's redundancy cases.

Grimsby (Redundancies)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many redundancies were notified to his Department in the Grimsby travel-to-work area in each year from 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The available information relating to confirmed redundancies, is given in the following table:

Redundancies confirmed as due to occur in the Grimsby jobcentre area†—1979 to June 1985*

	Number
1979	nil
1980	1,005
1981	1,886
1982	880
1983	1,436
1984	1,081
1985‡	78

* Confirmed by the Manpower Services Commission as due to occur and based on notifications of impending redundancies involving ten or more workers.

† The Grimsby jobcentre area approximates very closely to the Grimsby travel-to-work area.

‡ January to June. Includes provisional figures for May and June 1985.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Employment what action he is taking to seek to ensure that public sector employers match the percentage quota of registered disabled staff currently employed by the private sector.

Mr. Alan Clark: As my hon. Friend will know, Government departments on average employ a higher percentage of registered disabled persons than the private sector. As to other public sector employers, staff of the Manpower Services Commission regularly remind them of their duties and obligations under the quota scheme, both during contacts connected with the resettlement of individual registered disabled people and on regular visits to promote employment opportunities for disabled people generally. These efforts have been given added impetus by the publication of the code of practice on the employment of disabled people, which also reminds employers of their responsibilities under the scheme. In addition I wrote last November to Ministerial colleagues asking them to draw the code to the attention of the public sector organisations for which they are responsibile.

South West Surrey

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have registered as willing to work, giving details of their skills and experience, at jobcentres covering south west Surrey at the most recent convenient date; how many people were registered as unemployed for the purpose of benefit in the equivalent area at the same date; and what were the equivalent figures for the same day in 1984 and 1983.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the parliamentary constituency of South West Surrey 287 people were registered for employment at jobcentres on 7 June 1985, 380 at 8 June 1984, and 1,468 at 3 June 1983. These figures include some employed people seeking a change of employment and some unemployed people not claiming benefit. Since October 1982 there has been no requirement for jobseekers to register at the jobcentres either to use the facilities or as a condition of claiming unemployment benefit. The higher figure for 1983 reflects the protracted run-down of the stock of registrations following the introduction of voluntary registrations in October 1982.

The number of unemployed persons claiming unemployment benefit, supplementary allowances or national insurance credits in the South West Surrey parliamentary constituency on 13 June 1985 was 1,537, 1,542 at 14 June 1984 and 1,595 at 9 June 1983. It is a condition of receipt of these benefits or credits that a person be unemployed and capable and available for work.

Female Unemployment

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many females under 18 years have been unemployed since they left school; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many females aged under 18 years have been unemployed since they left school; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following information is in the Library. On 13 June 1985 there were 44,939 female unemployed school leavers claiming unemployment benefit in the United Kingdom. In addition there were 46,828 female non-claimant school leavers registered at careers offices. While these figures relate to people under 18 who have never had a job since leaving full-time education, not all of them will necessarily have been continuously unemployed since then, for example some may have had a period out of the labour force or had a place on the youth training scheme without a contract of employment.

Bathgate

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Employment what action he is taking in the light of the evidence given to the Cooper Committee by West Lothian district council on employment in the Bathgate travel-to-work area, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Alan Clark: I understand that my hon. Friend, the Under Secretary of State for Energy, will be writing to the hon. Member shortly about this document.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many men and women were in (a) full-time and (b) part-time employment in summer 1979 and the latest date in the current year for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark: The following table gives the available information for employees in employment in Great Britain. The number of female employees working full-time and part-time are identified quarterly in the official estimates, but similar figures for male employees are only available for census of employment dates.

Employees in employment, Great Britain

(thousands)

	Males		Females
	Full-time	*Part-time	Full-time	*Part-time
June 1978	12,396	704	5,486	3,688
June 1979	†13,183		5,585	3,870
September 1981	11,511	718	5,304	3,781
March 1985	†11,493		4,933	4,253

* In this table an employee is classed as part-time if he is normally employed for not more than 30 hours per week, excluding main meal breaks and overtime.

† Separate estimates for full-time and part-time employees are not available for these dates; the figures refer to all male employees.

The Labour Force Survey provides information on a different basis. The following table shows the 1979 and 1984 survey estimates for full-time and part-time male and female employees.

Spring 1984	11,197	452	5,016	3,959

* In this table an employee is shown as full-time or part-time according to whether he considers his as a full-time or part-time job.

Devon

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the employed labour force in December 1984 in Devon; and what was the corresponding figure for December 1982.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Department's regular statistics do not provide estimates of the employed labour force for areas smaller than regions.

The 1981 census of population recorded 368,570 people working (employees and self employed) in Devon in April 1981. Comparative figures will become available after the census in 1991.

Cheshire

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Employment, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Tatton on Tuesday 23 July about job statistics, if he will list the information given in that reply by travel-to-work area and by parliamentary constituency in the county of Cheshire.

Mr. Alan Clark: Figures showing the number of registered jobseekers are only available for jobcentre areas and cannot be given for the areas requested. Figures showing the number of unemployed claimants in travel-to-work areas and parliamentary constituencies on 13 June 1985 are published in tables 2.4 and 2.10 respectively of the Department's "Employment Gazette" for July, which is available in the Library.

Parental Leave

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Employment when he next expects to discuss the EEC draft directives on parental leave with other EEC ministers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No further Ministerial discussions of this proposal is arranged.

Wages Councils

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will now give details of the responses to the consultative paper on wages councils.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There were 792 responses received. They were classified according to their support for (1) abolition; (2) major reform; (3) retention essentially of the present arrangements. On this basis the outcome was as follows:

	(1)	(2)	(3)
Organisations
Employer organisations with seats on wages councils	13	34	4
Other employer organisations	14	22	—
Worker organisations with seats on wages councils	—	—	8

Other individuals	11	20	175

* Includes petitions counted as single responses.

ENERGY

Coal

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what effect the rise in the exchange rate against the United States dollar since the beginning of January has had on the £ sterling price of coal imported from the United States of America.

Mr. David Hunt: Where US coal is imported under existing contracts which specify a fixed US dollar price, the appreciation of £ sterling will reduce the £ sterling price of the coal.

Nuclear Materials (Safeguards)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if the United Kingdom has used its prerogative under Article 14 of the United Kingdom-International Atomic Energy Agency-Euratom Agreement, Cmnd. 6730, March 1977, to withdraw safeguarded plutonium from safeguard, for defence purposes.

Mr. Goodlad: Plutonium has been withdrawn from safeguards under this article. The material in question did not come from civil reactors.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to inform Parliament as well as the International Atomic Energy Agency and Euratom whenever safeguarded material is withdrawn for defence purposes.

Mr. Goodlad: If safeguarded material is withdrawn from safeguards both Euratom and the IAEA are informed in accordance with the terms of United Kingdom safeguards agreements. The details are supplied to these organisations on a strictly confidential basis. They are not published and it would not be in the public interest to publish them.

British Gas

Mr. Blair asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list in the Official Report those individuals and organisations which have been appointed from outside Her Majesty's Government to advise his Department on the proposed privatisation of British Gas.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The Government have to date appointed four firms to advise on the proposed privatisation of the British Gas Corporation: N M Rothschild & Sons Limited as financial advisers; Slaughter & May as legal advisers; Touche Ross & Co as tax and accountancy advisers and Cazenove & Co as stockbrokers. In addition Price Waterhouse have been jointly appointed by the Government and British Gas to act as reporting accountants.

Mr. Blair asked the Secretary of State for Energy what follow-up action has been taken by his Department in response to the Deloitte Haskins and Sells efficiency study of British Gas; whether he and British Gas accept the detailed proposals on pages 8 to 23 of that study; and if he will place in the Library a progress report of steps taken towards implementation.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Wiltshire, North (Mr. Needham) on 13 February 1984. Latest information on the corporation's record in securing efficiency improvements is contained in the 1984-85 annual report and accounts. Privatisation will mean a whole new emphasis on efficiency for the benefit of consumers, shareholders and employees alike.

Plutonium

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will give details of the market value of plutonium of different isotopic qualities per kilogram weight.

Mr. Goodlad: There are very few transactions involving plutonium and no standard market prices.

Coking Coal

Mr. Ron Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will have discussions with the chairman of the National Coal Board about its plans for the future development of United Kingdom coking coal deposits and the export potential of this commodity; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has as to the plans of the National Coal Board for developing coking coal deposits in the period from 1985 to 1990.

Mr. David Hunt: Assessment of the scope to develop coking coal deposits in the United Kingdom is a matter for the National Coal Board. The Government expect the board to maximise its long term profitability by securing those sales which are profitable on a continuing basis, whether at home or overseas.

Coal Stocks

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total amount of coal in stock at collieries, power stations and elsewhere in March 1978, 1981, 1983, 1984 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Goodlad: The figures are published monthly in Energy Trends, copies of which are available in the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Data Protection Act

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he proposes to make any orders pursuant to his powers under the Data Protection Act in respect of personal information concerning health and social work.

Mr. Waddington: Yes. The Department of Health and Social Security will be issuing a consultation paper in the autumn inviting views on the possible contents of an Order to be made under section 29(1) of the Data Protection Act 1984 dealing with subject access to health data. A similar paper on an Order to be made under section 29(2) in respect of subject access to personal information concerning social work was issued on 21 June 1985, and responses to this should be received by 30 September 1985. The responses to these consultation papers will be analysed and will be taken into account in the preparation of orders which I would expect to be made during the course of next year.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will now announce the fee for registration under the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Waddington: The level of the fee prescribed for registration under the Data Protection Act will be dependent upon estimates of the total cost of running the registrar's office and the data protection tribunal, and the number of applicants for registration. My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to announce the fee shortly.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will now announce the maximum fee which data users may charge to data subjects for the required provision of information under the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Waddington: The provisions of the Data Protection Act giving an individual a right of access to information about himself held on computer will not come into force until November 1987. We therefore consider it too soon to fix the maximum fee which a data user will be entitled to charge an individual applying for access.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his latest estimate of the number of registrations required under the Data Protection Act; and how this compares with the estimates made at the time of the passage through Parliament of the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many registrations he expects to be returned in the initial six months of operation of the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Waddington: It is very difficult to estimate the likely number of registrations under the Data Protection Act. It was assumed in the early stages of planning that 200,000 applications for registration might be made in the initial six month registration period, with 50,000 applications being made each year thereafter. The Data Protection Registrar has now had the opportunity to review these figures following discussion with a wide range of representative bodies and further study and I understand that he is now working on the assumption that he will receive 300,000 initial applications, with 90,000 per year thereafter. We accept this as the best estimate currently available.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his latest estimate of the cost of implementing the Data Protection Act; and how this figure compares with his estimate at the time of the passage through Parliament of the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Waddington: The explanatory and financial memorandum to the Data Protection Bill estimated that the yearly costs of running the registrar's office and the tribunal would be £650,000 at 1983 prices. Discussions with the registrar after his appointment and revised assumptions made then about his workload caused this figure to be reviewed and his current budget for 1984-85 is £1·2 million.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what ways the Data Protection Registrar will monitor any personal data transferred between Government Departments or other organisations and the police or the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Waddington: The registrar will not conduct continuous monitoring of particular data users. If he receives complaints or if he has any other reason to believe that transfers of personal data are taking place which breach the requirements of the Data Protection Act or of the principles we would expect him to investigate the matter. Should it prove necessary the registrar may apply to a circuit judge for a warrant enabling him to gain access to the data and to any relevant documents. The registrar has the necessary powers to deal with data users involved in a breach of any of the provisions of the Act.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to ensure that, when personal data is transferred from Government Departments or other organisations to the police, such transfers are fully recorded and documented by the recipient police force.

Mr. Waddington: The police will be subject to the registration provisions of the Data Protection Act and we have no proposals to impose additional requirements on them. Each chief officer of police will register under the Act as a data user in respect of the personal data held by him and will be required to describe in his register entry the sources, including Government Departments or other organisations, from which he obtains his data.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his latest estimate of the number of staff required to implement the Data Protection Act; and how this compares with the estimate made during the passage through Parliament of the Data Protection Bill.

Data Registrar

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make additional provision for staffing of the office of the Data Registrar.

Mr. Waddington: The explanatory and financial memorandum to the Data Protection Bill indicated that the registrar would initially need about 20 staff.

It was made clear during the passage of the Bill, however, that we would consider sympathetically any requests from the Registrar for more staff and as a result of discussions with him a staffing complement of 47 has been approved. A request for a further increase is being considered.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juvenile offenders have been sentenced to (a) detention centres and (b) attendance centres in each of the years since 1983.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" (for 1983 in volume 1, tables S1.1(B) and S1.1(C) for magistrates' courts and volume 2, tables S2.1(B) and S2.1(C) for the Crown Court). Some information covering the first half of 1984 was published in Home Office Statistical Bulletin, issue 12/85 "The Sentencing of Young Offenders under the Criminal Justice Act 1982: July 1983-June 1984" but information for the whole of 1984 is not yet available.

Brixton Prison (Strip Searches)

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times and on what occasions, women in Brixton prison are strip searched.

Mr. Mellor: My noble Friend will write to the hon. Member.

Ancillary Services (Privatisation)

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress so far made in contracting out to private tender ancillary services within the prison department.

Mr. Mellor: Our aim is to contract out ancillary services to the private sector where it can be clearly demonstrated that it would be economically advantageous to do so, and where security conditions permit. Examples include contracts with the private sector for the movement of both prisoners and freight and the repair of vehicles the value of which is currently of the order of £6 million. In the principle training centres night security, catering and all domestic services are contracted out, and in many prison establishments services including hair cutting, window cleaning, refuse collection, dry cleaning, pest control and some laundry services are provided by means of private tender.

Abortions

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many abortions were performed over the last five years (a) in prison and other offenders' institutions and (b) on prisoners and other detained offenders.

Mr. Mellor: The termination of a pregnancy may be carried out only in a hospital administered by the National Health Service or in a place specifically approved by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services. Where such a procedure is deemed by the prison medical officer to be clinically appropriate, and the statutory conditions are met, arrangements are made for it to be undertaken outside prison. Statistical information on such cases is not collected by the Department and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it remains his policy to prohibit the use of animals for the practice of microsurgical skills; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: It is the Government's intention, as set out in paragraph 32(3) of the White Paper 'Scientific Procedures on Living Animals' (Cmnd. 9521), to make provision in new legislation to permit the use of live animals where necessary for the practice of microsurgery, subject to strict controls. The Home Secretary's permission will be required in every case, and he will give it only to qualified surgeons working on approved microsurgical courses, and using only rodents which are anaesthetised throughout the procedure and killed before the animal can recover consciousness.

One-parent Families

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the latest position as regards the implementation by his Department of the recommendations which affect its responsibilities of the report of the Finer committee on one-parent families.

Mr. Mellor: The implications for the magistrates' courts of the establishment of a family court are among the matters being considered by an inter-Departmental working group set up by my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor and the Home Secretary. The working group intends to issue a consultative paper later in the year.

As a result of earlier consideration of other recommendations of the Finer committee affecting the responsibilities of the Department, recommendations 1 and 2 were rejected; recommendations 41, 52, 53 and 225 were implemented, in whole or in part.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the level of funding for joint boards controlling police services after the abolition of the metropolitan authorities.

Mr. Brittan: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) on 25 July about the expenditure levels I propose to set for the new joint police and fire and civil defence authorities. The new police authorities will be funded from percepts within maxima to be prescribed in due course under part I of the Rates Act 1984 and from block grant, police specific grant and other receipts.

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what expenditure levels he proposes to set in respect of 1986-87 for the new joint police and fire and civil defence authorities in the metropolitan area, and the London Fire and Civil Defence Authority.

Mr. Brittan [pursuant to his reply, 25 July 1985]: I regret that the proposed expenditure levels for fire and civil defence were given incorrectly. The figures for fire are unchanged. The following should be substituted for the second table in the Answer.

£ million

	The figures are comprised of
	Fire and Civil Defence	Fire	Civil Defence
Greater Manchester	37·886	37·803	0·083
Merseyside	26·755	26·684	0·071
South Yorkshire	18·702	18·630	0·072
Tyne and Wear	19·291	19·220	0·071
West Yorkshire	29·032	28·949	0·083
West Midlands	35·682	35·598	0·084
London	140·942	140·804	0·138

Immigration

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of people from (a) India and (b) Pakistan who have been refused entry into the United Kingdom during each of the last three years.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested is published annually in table 1 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom" (Cmnd. 8944, 9246 and 9544 for 1982, 1983 and 1984 respectively).

Discharged Prisoners

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of discharged prisoners in any recent convenient period received (a) the standard discharge grant and (b) the higher rate discharge grant payable to homeless prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prisoners discharged from Liverpool, Birmingham and Pentonville prisons, respectively, in any recent convenient period received (a) the standard discharge grant and (b) the higher rate discharge grant, payable to homeless prisoners.

Mr. Mellor: For the three month period ending 30 June 1985 the following proportion of prisoners discharged received grants at:

	Liverpool per cent.	Birmingham per cent.	Pentonville per cent.
(a) Standard rate	30	25	29
(b) Higher rate	13	17	21

Immigration and Nationality Department

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department's study of regionalisation of the immigration and nationality department will be completed.

Mr. Waddington: The aim is to complete this study by the end of 1985.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present number of ethnic members of the Metropolitan police serving in W division and the ranks that they hold.

Mr. Giles Shaw: On 24 July there were five, all constables, serving in 'W' district.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of cases of attack or racial harassment reported to the Metropolitan police during each of the last three years.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The figures for reported racial incidents in the Metropolitan police area from 1 May 1982 to 30 June 1985 are as follows:

	Number
1982 (from May to December*)	1,273
1983	1,280
1984	1,515
1985 (to 30 June) (Provisional)	705

* The definition was widened in May 1982 to include incidents which do not necessarily involve the commission of an offence. Figures collected for the first four months of 1982 are not comparable.

Association of Chief Police Officers

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a list showing the current editions of all reports produced by the Association of Chief Police Officers which are available to him.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Seaside Resorts

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the operation of deregulation under the Shops Act as it applies to seaside resorts.

Mr. Mellor: Our plans for legislation to deregulate shop hours will mean that shopkeepers in seaside resorts will, in common with all other shopkeepers, be able to choose their own opening hours throughout the year. This will provide increased opportunities in seaside resorts for both shopkeepers and tourists.

Drugs

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the methods by which drugs confiscated by the courts following legal proceedings are disposed of.

Mr. Mellor: Confiscated drugs which are no longer needed in connection with legal proceedings are normally destroyed by burning. Small quantities of seized drugs may be retained under secure conditions for training purposes.

Compensation

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce proposals for providing prompt compensation to victims of public disasters such as the Abbeystead explosion or the Bradford fire.

Mr. Mellor: I do not think that it would be appropriate to introduce arrangements for the payment of compensation from public funds in the circumstances to which the right hon. Member refers.

Police (Animal Food Cost)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list details of the cost of dog and horse food provided for the Metropolitan police in each year since 1979.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that information is not maintained in precisely the form requested. The available information for the financial years 1980-81 to 1984-85 is as follows:

Costs to the Metropolitan police of dog and horse feed etc; 1980-81 to 1984-85 (£000)

Financial year	Dog and food and dog training and handling equipment	Horse feed and removal of horse manure from police stables
1980-81	75	151
1981-82	84	160
1982-83	91	142
1983-84	108	155
1984-85	104	155

Information in comparable form is not available for 1979-80.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will state, for each year since 1979, the number of tons of oats consumed by Metropolitan police horses and the average annual intake of each horse.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that Metropolitan police horses are fed on a daily diet consisting of 3 kilogrammes of oats, 1kg of bran, 5½kg of hay, 6½kg of straw, 1kg of chaff, and ½kg of linseed per animal. The estimated total amount of feed consumed by all Metropolitan police horses in each year from 1979 to 1984 is as follows:

Estimated annual intake of feed by Metropolitan Police horses 1979 to 1984 (in metric tonnes) oats	bran	hay	straw	chaff	linseed

1979	199	66	365	431	66	33

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of dog biscuits used each year since 1979 by the Metropolitan police dog unit and the average quantity of dog biscuits consumed by each dog in each of those years.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that information is available only for the financial years 1983-84 and 1984-85, when the amount of dog biscuits bought by the force was 42 tonnes and 48 tonnes respectively. On average an adult dog consumes about 120 kg of dog biscuits in a year.

Miss Hilda Murrell

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether information has been given to him about the name of the client whose solicitors were interviewed by the Northumbria police in relation to Zeus Security, Sizewell B objectors and the case of Hilda Murrell.

Mr. Giles Shaw: As my noble Friend said on 26 June in another place at column 825, the Chief Constable of West Mercia does not consider it appropriate to disclose the identity of the client whose solicitors briefed Zeus Security Consultants in relation to the alleged Sizewell B connection in the death of Miss Hilda Murell.

Prison Workshop Closures

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals the Prison Board has to provide alternative activities to replace time out of cells lost by workshop closures.

Mr. Mellor: These proposals will be formulated in the course of the review which my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 12 July in reply to a Question by my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) at column 560.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison officer instructor posts and supervisory disciplinary posts he estimates will be lost through the closure of prison workshops; what are the current costs of these posts; what is the establishment in each of these grades: and, at the latest convenient date, how many officers were placed in each grade.

Mr. Mellor: On 30 June 1985 there were 1,046 uniform and civilian instructors of all grades in post against a total authorised complement of 1,253, at a total annual cost of £15·6 million. There are no central records of the number of discipline officers tasked to supervise workshops.

It is not possible to assess the number of posts which will be lost until the review which my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 12 July in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) at column 560 has been completed.

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to comply with the European standard minimum rules on the treatment of prisoners regarding work of a useful nature to keep prisoners actively employed for a normal working day in the light of the planned closure of prison workshops.

Mr. Mellor: The review which my right hon. and learned Friend has commissioned requires the Prison Department to examine on the ground how the present network of industrial workshops could be rationalised, while retaining the existing level of work and related activity for inmates. The European standard minimum rules will be kept in mind in the course of that review.

Prison Industries

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the conclusions of the Prison Board in respect of the long-term future of Prison Industries, following its review of the short and medium-term prospects.

Mr. Mellor: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on 12 July at column 560. The message to staff from the director general of the prison service made it clear that the proposals for rationalisation do not signal a reduced commitment on the part of Ministers or the Prison Board to prison industries. On the contrary they are designed to provide a sounder base from which to improve, and consolidate, the contribution that industries can, and do, make to the running of establishments and the occupation of inmates. The detailed application of these principles will be considered in the light of the review which my right hon. and learned Friend has announced.

Immigration Inquiry Bureau

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many telephone calls were made in each month to the immigration inquiry bureau in the last 12 months for which figures are available; and whether he has any information as to how many received the engaged tone.

Mr. Waddington: The number of calls answered by the immigration telephone inquiry bureau during the period July 1984-June 1985, and the number of callers recorded as having received the engaged tone during this period, are as follows:

Entry Clearance

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many appeals against (a) refusal of entry clearance and (b) refusal to revoke or vary leave to enter or remain were (i) determined and (ii) successful in 1984.

Passenger Statistics

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing by nationality the number of (a) passengers admitted, (b) visitors admitted for six months, (c) visitors admitted for other than six months, (d) passengers refused and (e) passengers detained in the United Kingdom during 1984.

Mr. Waddington: The readily available information on the numbers of passengers admitted and refused and on visitors admitted by nationality in 1984 is given in table 1 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1984" (Cmnd. 9844). For the available information on the detention of passengers by nationality, I would refer the hon. Member to the answer given to a question from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman) on 29 April 1985 at columns 21-24.

Bail Hostels

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many vacant places there were in bail hostels in London (a) for the last month when figures were available and (b) in the 12 months preceding that period.

Mr. Mellor: On 30 June this year in London there were 16 places vacant in bail hostels and 51 in probation hostels, which also take persons on bail.

In the 12 months ended 30 June there was a daily average of 26 places vacant in bail hostels and 49 in probation hostels.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many places there are currently in bail hostels in London.

Mr. Mellor: In London there are currently 102 places in bail hostels and 204 places in probation hostels, which also take persons on bail.

Firearms

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement defining an open certificate in the context of the administration of the Firearms Act 1968 and his recent working party's report dated April 1984.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to his previous question on 27 June at column 456.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement regarding his recent discussions with the Association of Chief Police Officers concerning recent representations in favour of stricter controls on shotguns and on the conclusions reached following those discussions.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Department keeps in close and continuing touch with the association about firearms matters, including the desirability and practicality of stricter shotgun controls. We have not yet reached any conclusions on whether stricter shotgun controls should be introduced, save that my right hon. and learned Friend has decided to amend the firearms rules in due course to require the holder of a shotgun certificate to notify the chief officer of police of any change in his permanent address.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish any evidence submitted to the working party on the administration of the Firearms Act 1968 regarding the correlation between the strictness of controls on shotguns and the incidence of the criminal use of such weapons.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. Only a few incidental references were made to this in evidence submitted to the working party.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement regarding the formation of shooting sportspersons liaison groups in each police authority area, to carry out the suggestions put forward by his recent working party in paragraph 25 of the report dated April 1984.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is for chief officers of police, taking into account paragraph 25 of the working party report, to decide on the extent and manner of consultations necessary before inserting territorial restrictions in firearm certificates.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement as to the definition of vermin used in the recent report dated April 1984 by his working party into the administration of the Firearms Act 1968; and whether it is intended to cover general pests such as crows, foxes, mink, marauding dogs and so on;

(2) if he will make a statement as to the definition of deerstalking used in the recent report dated April 1984 by his working party into the administration of the Firearms Act 1968; and whether it is intended to cover deer control, vermin, foxes and marauding dogs;

(3) pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Caerphilly on 5 June, Official Report, column 159, on the Firearms Act 1968, if he will make a statement giving his definition of general sporting purposes.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what extent he monitors the administration by police forces of the Firearms Act 1968; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Department is kept informed by chief officers of police, shooting organisations and firearms users amongst others and guidance is offered as and when appropriate. We also set up a Working Party in 1982 to achieve greater consistency of practice amongst police forces and to streamline procedures.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any recent representations advocating further restrictions and controls on shotguns.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to his previous question on 2 July at column 95.

Customs Resources

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will have discussions with representatives of tour operators regarding arrangements for the provision of customs and immigration staff and facilities at entry and departure points in the British Isles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The group on tourism and leisure which met under the chairmanship of my noble Friend the Minister without Portfolio published its report "Pleasure, Leisure and Jobs" on 22 July. As announced in paragraph 61 of that report the Government "is looking at ways of giving higher priority to manpower adjustment where the costs of providing extra facilities are fully met by commercial operators".

My officials will be following this up with those concerned in the light also of the related recommendation by the Home Affairs Committee in its report on the immigration and nationality department (6th report, 1984-85).

The provision of customs staff and facilities is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Special Quota Voucher Holders

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special quota voucher holders arrived in Britain from India in 1984.

Mr. Waddington: Comprehensive information is not available on the origin of the 1,240 special voucher holders accepted for settlement on arrival in the United Kingdom in 1984. Six hundred vouchers were issued in 1984 against the quota for India.

Safety Regulations

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the updating of safety regulations for cinemas and other public places.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend will shortly be consulting interested organisations on revisions to the Cinematograph (Safety) Regulations 1955 which take account of changes which have taken place in film exhibiting since 1955. So far as other public places of entertainment are concerned, the safety requirements are, in the main, controlled by conditions imposed in the licence which can be updated at the discretion of the licensing authority.

Imprisonment Statistics

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by petty sessional division the percentage of those appearing before the courts of male and female adult offenders who were sentenced to periods of imprisonment by magistrates courts during 1984.

Mr. Mellor: I will write to the hon. Member.

Rape

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the percentage of men found guilty of rape and referred for psychiatric treatment for each of the last five years for which statistics are available;

(2) if he will list the proportion of allegations of rape which the police have (a) investigated and (b) pressed charges on, for the last five years for which statistics are available;

(3) what is the average sentence given to a convicted rapist;

(4) if he will list the number of people convicted of rape for each of the last five years for which statistics are available, broken down into the following age groups: under 21, 21 to 30, 31 to 40, 41 to 50, 51 to 60 and over 60 years.

Mr. Mellor: The readily available information on offences of rape is published annually in 'Criminal Statistics, England and Wales' for recorded offences in table 2.9 of the issue for 1983 (Cmnd. 9349); for proceedings and sentences at magistrates' courts and the Crown Court in tables S1.1(A) and S2.1(A) of the supplementary tables; for the age groups of those in table S4.1(A): and for the distribution of the lengths of prison sentences in table S2.4. The figures for rape include some offences other than under section 1 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956, including offences of aiding and abetting and attempts. No information is readily available centrally on any allegations of rape not investigated by the police or on men found guilty and referred for psychiatric treatment.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research Her Majesty's Government have sponsored into the extent of sexual assaults and rapes not reported to the police.

Mr. Mellor: The British crime survey of 1984, which gathered information about people's experience of crime from a sample of 11,000 households in England and Wales, included questions designed to measure the extent of sexual assaults on females (including rape), both those reported to the police and those not reported. The first report of this survey "Taking Account of Crime: Key Findings from the Second British Crime Survey" by Mike Hough and Pat Mayhew was published earlier this month as Home Office Research Study No. 85. A copy is in the Library.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the number of people who have been victims of rape for each of the last five years for which statistics are available, broken down into the following age groups: under 21, 21 to 30, 31 to 40, 41 to 50, 51 to 60 and over 60 years;

(2) if he will list the number of reported rapes for each of the last five years for which statistics are available, broken down into days of the week upon which the alleged offence occurred.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not collected centrally. However, some information on the ages of victims of rape in 1973 is to be found in 'Sexual Offences, Consent and Sentencing', Home Office Research Study No. 54 (Table B.2).

Police (Doctors)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the proportion of male and female doctors employed by each police force.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Police surgeons are appointed by police authorities and no central record is maintained.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to encourage the appointment of more women doctors by the police.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The appointment of police surgeons is the responsibility of police authorities and we have not thought it necessary to advise them on the way in which they should exercise this responsibility.

Sexual Offences

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many men have been found guilty of incest for each of the last five years for which figures are available; and how many such men have committed more than one such offence;

(2) how many men have been found guilty of sex with a minor for each of the last five years for which figures are available;

(3) how many men have been found guilty of sex with a minor in each of the last five years have been related to the victim.

Mr. Mellor: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Police (Arrests and Stops)

Mr. Silkin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) (a) what was the total number of arrests from 1 January 1984 to 1 July 1984 including a breakdown by age, gender and ethnic origin, (b) the total number of charges from 1 January 1984 to 1 July 1984, including a breakdown by age, gender, ethnic origin and charge, and (c) the total number of stops resulting in a charge, from 1 January 1984 to 1 July 1984, including a breakdown of age, gender and ethnic origin in P district of the Metropolitan police;

(2) of the total number of stops not resulting in a charge from 1 January 1984 to 1 July 1984 in P district of the Metropolitan police, what was the proportion of stops as a result of reasonable suspicion of (a) possession of drugs, (b) possession of an offensive weapon, (c) possession of stolen goods and (d) others, including a breakdown.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that information on stops, including reasons for such stops is collected centrally only annually and information for part of the year could only be provided at disproportionate cost. I will write to the hon. Member about the parts of his question relating to arrests and charges.

P District

Mr. Silkin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much of the budget of P district of the Metropolitan police was spent outside P district during 1983-84 and 1984-85, respectively.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Districts of the Metropolitan police do not have separate budgets.

Alhaji Umaru Dikko

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a decision on the application for the extradition to Nigeria of Alhaji Umaru Dikko.

Mr. Mellor: The extradition request remains under consideration. I am not yet in a position to say when a decision will be made.

Miners' Dispute

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many telexes were sent by the permanent under-secretary in his Department, Sir Brian Cubbon, to police forces during the recent miners' dispute; and what was the purpose of the telexes.

Mr. Brittan: One such telex was sent, to chief officers of police in areas affected by the miners' dispute. Its purpose was to draw attention to public statements of mine.

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those district councils which have (a) adopted the 1984 model byelaw relating to straw and stubble burning and (b) adopted or will adopt before this summer's harvest, the 1985 model byelaw.

Mr. Mellor: Two hundred and ten local authorities have adopted the 1984 straw and stubble burning byelaws, and to date 11 authorities are in the process of adopting the 1985 model byelaws circulated to local authorities on 21 June. The local authorities are as follows:

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what precise steps his Department has taken to monitor the effectiveness of the 1984 model bye-law dealing with straw and stubble burning; what plans he has for the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I will reply as soon as possible.

Police (Industrial Disputes)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis on police operations in connection with the current industrial dispute at London and Essex Newspapers, London E.17; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that the police attended the premises at the request of the occupier to prevent any possible breach of the peace. A trespasser left peacefully at the request of the police.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what instructions are given to the Metropolitan police about entering private commercial property to act on behalf of employers in industrial disputes.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The police do not act on behalf of any party to an industrial dispute but they have a general duty to uphold the law which may lead to their involvement in incidents connected with an industrial dispute. Various statutory powers of entry exist, and there are common law powers for the police to enter property to deal with or prevent a breach of the peace and save life or prevent serious damage to property.

Dental Students

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether, pursuant to his statement of 26 March, Official Report, columns 228-29, dental students accepted before 1 April for entry in October will be allowed to stay and work when their training is complete;

(2) whether, pursuant to his statement of 26 March, Official Report, columns 228-29, overseas dental students now in training in the United Kingdom will be allowed to stay and work when their training is complete.

Mr. Waddington: Overseas dental students may remain here for up to four years on completion of their studies to undergo post-graduate training in hospital. Those wishing to take salaried posts in general practice will normally require the approval of the Department of Employment or, if proposing to work as a principal, will need to qualify for admission as a self-employed person.

Under the Statement of Changes to the Immigration Rules laid before Parliament on 26 March (HC 293), only those overseas nationals who had sought or been granted permission to work in the United Kingdom as dentists on or before 1 April 1985 will continue to be allowed to take professional appointments without restriction.

Extradition Treaty

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the re-negotiation of the extradition treaty with Italy of 1873.

Mr. Mellor: Following my right hon. and learned Friend's meeting in Rome in February with the Italian Minister of Justice, preliminary discussions have taken place between officials of both Governments with a view to preparing a revised extradition treaty. In particular, we consider that the list of offences for which extradition can be granted should be updated to include certain terrorist and drug offences.

Video Classification

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will designate persons as the authority responsible for making arrangements for the classification of video works under the Video Recordings Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brittan: Pursuant to the proposals for designation laid before Parliament on 14 June 1985, I have today designated, under section 4(1) of the Video Recordings Act 1984, the Earl of Harewood, the Lord Birkett and Miss Monica Sims, respectively the president and vice-presidents of the British Board of Film Classification, as the authority responsible for making arrangements for the matters set out in that section of the Act. The board will be responsible for determining whether or not video works are suitable to be classified and for carrying out the other arrangements specified in section 4(1) of the Video Recordings Act.

I have today written to each member of the authority attaching a copy of the notice of designation and I have placed a copy of the letter in the Library. Also attached to the letter are the Video Appeals Committee Provisions containing the arrangements for appeals, in accordance with section 4(3) of the Act, against determinations by the board, with which I am satisfied, and the tariff of fees which I have approved for the purposes of section 4(5) and (6) of the Act.

Hospital Radio

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications for the future of hospital radio of Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the development of community radio; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I will reply as soon as possible.

Life Sentences

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the number of people who were serving a life prison sentence and have been released on licence and have been recalled to prison in each of the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: I will reply as soon as possible.

Metropolitan Police (Liaison)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will identify those London boroughs where consultation in the police liaison and consultation committees has been rejected by the local authority or where there are no plans to establish a consultation or liaison scheme.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 18 July 1985, c. 230]: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis intends, in pursuance of his duty under section 106 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, to make arrangements for consultation between the community and the police in each borough and district within the Metropolitan police district, taking account of the guidance issued by my right hon. and learned Friend last January. As required by the Act, he is consulting borough and district Councils as to the arrangements that would be appropriate in each area. A number of councils are still considering their response. Of those that have responded, none has rejected the possibility of participating in consultative arrangements; but Hackney, Haringey, Redbridge and Tower Hamlets have made proposals which the commissioner considers to be unacceptable because they do not conform to my right hon. and learned Friend's guidance. The Metropolitan police are to have further discussions with these councils.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the London boroughs and district councils within the Metropolitan police district which currently co-operate in police liaison and consultation committees and who service such a structure in their area; when each structure was established; what is the composition of each committee; and how many elected members serve on the committees.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 18 July 1985, c. 230]: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that arrangements for consultation between the police and the community, broadly conforming to the guidance issued by my right hon. and learned Friend under section 106 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, are now operating in 26 boroughs and districts within the Metropolitan police district. The latest available information about these arrangements is given in the following table:

Emergency Centres

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those local authorities which have since 1 December 1983 received approvals for grant aid for the purpose of establishing, equipping or maintaining an emergency centre pursuant to regulation 5(1)(c) of the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983.

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those local authorities which have since 1 December 1983 received approvals for grant aid for the purpose of establishing, equipping or maintaining an emergency centre pursuant to Regulation 4(1)(b) of the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 19 July 1985, c. 291]: Listed are those county councils and district councils for which approval has been given under Regulations 4(1)(b) and 5(1)(c) respectively of the Civil Defence (General Local Authority Functions) Regulations 1983, for grant aid on schemes to establish, equip or improve premises as emergency centres. The information is correct as at 22 July 1985.

Interview Waiting Time

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present waiting time for interview of husbands or wives wishing to enter the United Kingdom from India, Pakistan and Bangladesh.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is as follows:

The waiting time in months at the end of June was:

	Bangladesh (Dhaka)	India New Delhi	India Bombay	Pakistan (Islamabad)
Husbands	23	14	6	11·75
Second wives or with children over 10 or reapplicants	23	14	6	11·75
Priority*	6	2	2	3
First wives with children under 10 (Dhaka only)	6	—	—	—
Newly married wives (Dhaka only)	2 weeks	—	—	—

* Priority interviews are given to wives with no children and wives whose children are under 10 where it is the first marriage of both partners.

Overseas Prisons

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present number of (a) men and (b) women from the United Kingdom at present serving prison sentences in prisons overseas.

Mr. Renton: I have been asked to reply.

The information is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Ewe Hoggs

Mr. Maclean asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many ewe hoggs were included for the first time in applications for ewe premium in the current year.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested will not be available until the details on claim figures are processed for payment by computer, which will be done next year, after the European Commission have set the final rate.

Silage Walls

Mr. Leigh asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice his Department gives about the safe use of silage walls.

Mrs. Fenner: The Ministry publishes advisory leaflets about several aspects of silage, including the construction of silos. In addition farmers are urged to seek expert advice from building specialists in the Ministry's agricultural development and advisory service on the design and safe construction of tower and bunker silos since they are subject to considerable and variable stresses in normal use.

Cereals

Mr. Leigh asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is satisfied that the current level of export credit guarantees for United Kingdom cereals enables United Kingdom grain traders to compete on equal terms with their competitors.

Mr. MacGregor: The competitiveness of United Kingdom cereals depends upon a wide range of factors. During the 1984-85 season to date the United Kingdom has exported a record 3·5 million tonnes of barley, and achieved wheat exports of 2 million tonnes in an over-supplied and highly competitive world market. These figures indicate that United Kingdom grain exporters compete effectively in world markets.

Racehorses

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what restrictions exist on transfers of racehorses from the Continent to the United Kingdom for particular race-meetings.

Mrs. Fenner: My Department licenses the importation of racehorses from Western European countries provided they meet detailed animal health conditions designed to ensure that both the animals in question and the premises from which they originate are free of significant contagious or infectious diseases.

Aujeszky's Disease

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in the light of the further representations he has received since his statement of 18 July, Official Report, column 417, he will reconsider his policy regarding Government financial support for the Aujeszky's disease eradication fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: The representations which I have received since my statement do not provide grounds for reconsidering my conclusion that I could not agree to Government financial support being given to the costs of the campaign.

Milk Production

Mr. Nicholson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the amount of milk produced in the first three months of the 1985 quota year; what is the comparison with 1983 levels for the same period; and what percentage above or below quota productions is at present.

Mr. MacGregor: In the period April to June 1985 deliveries to the Milk Marketing Board in England and Wales were 3407·3 million litres compared with 3781·8 million litres in the same period in 1983. On the basis of these figures wholesale production to the end of June was running approximately 0·7 per cent. below quota.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the value of intervention stocks of barley, breadmaking wheat, feed wheat, and oilseed rape, respectively, held by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce at the end of the 1984-85 crop year.

Mr. MacGregor: The following is the value of the cereals stocks held by the Intervention Board on 30 June 1985, based on the buying-in prices applicable on that date.

	£ million
Barley	104
Wheat of breadmaking quality	8
Feedwheat	364
Oilseed Rape	Nil

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what stocks of barley, breadmaking wheat, feed wheat, and oilseed rape, respectively, were held in (a) intervention stores and (b) in private stores at the end of the 1984-85 crop year; and what were the comparable figures for 1983-84.

Mr. MacGregor: Stocks of barley, breadmaking wheat, feedwheat and oilseed rape held in intervention stores, including commercial stores used for that purpose, on 30 June 1985, the latest date for which information is available, and on 30 June 1984 were the following:

	Stocks (metric tonnes)
	30 June 1984	30 June 1985
Barley	72,017	917,290
Wheat of breadmaking quality	94,551	69,252
Feedwheat	8	3,222,105
Oilseed Rape	Nil	Nil

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the locations of privately owned stores which are to be used by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce for the storage of grain in the coming year, giving the capacity of each store and the level of payments from public funds for their use; and if he will indicate which of these stores are additional to 1984's provision.

Mr. MacGregor: Storage for intervention grain in the coming year will be taken up as required, and its location, capacity and cost is not yet known.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the reply of the Minister of State to the hon. Member for Warrington, North on 23 July concerning intervention stores for wheat, if he will list the uses of wheat sold from intervention.

Mr. MacGregor: Wheat has been sold from intervention stocks in the United Kingdom for milling into flour for export as food aid; and on to the home market probably for milling into flour and for use in animal feed.

Mr. Strang asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the level of intervention stocks in (a) public storage and (b) assisted private storage for the United Kingdom, for the latest available dates, 12 months ago and five years ago, for the following commodities: butter, skimmed milk powder, wheat, barley and beef.

Mr. MacGregor: The information is as follows:

Metric tonnes

	Butter	Skimmed milk powder	Wheat	Barley	Beef
Intervention Stocks
30 June 1985	180,000	36,000	3,291,000	917,000	58,000

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Strang asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what position Her Majesty's Government will adopt towards proposals to extend the moratorium on dumping of all nuclear waste at sea at the London dumping convention in September.

Mr. MacGregor: I am not aware that any such proposal has been made.

Contaminated Wine

Sir John Farr asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list in the Official Report the steps he has taken to warn the public of the dangers of buying certain table wines at the present time;

(2) how many instances have been traced in Britain of Austrian wine diluted with an anti-freeze ingredient being offered for sale to the public; and where these bottles have been traced;

(3) what guidance he is offering to the public on the risks of buying certain table wine at the current time;

(4) what information he has about the extent to which Austrian wines diluted with an anti-freeze ingredient have been imported for sale in Britain; and if he will make a statement;

(5) whether he has received any representations about compensation arrangements for members of the public and retailers who have purchased polluted Austrian table wines.

Mr. Jopling: On 11 July my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services issued a public warning advising against the sale and consumption of three types of Austrian white wine which had been contaminated with di-ethylene glycol, which is normally an anti-freeze ingredient. My Department carried out further inquiries to determine the extent of the problem and by 18 July it became evident that the potential contamination was more widespread than the original three types. I therefore issued advice to trade associations advising their members to withdraw all Austrian white wine from sale and reminding them that it is a criminal offence under regulations made under the Food Act to offer for sale any wine containing di-ethylene glycol. This advice was also issued publicly on 19 July and at the same time my right hon. Friend re-iterated his earlier public warning. My Department continued its investigation and it is now apparent that all Austrian wines—red, rose and white—must be regarded as suspect and I have therefore, on 25 July, extended advice accordingly.

Around 80 samples of Austrian wine in the United Kingdom had been analysed by midday 25 July either by my Food Laboratory or by public analysts. By then 14 positive instances of contaminated wine had been recorded; only one of these was from a bottle actually purchased by a consumer, in South Yorkshire. Further samples are being tested and it is not yet possible to say what proportion of the total Austrian wine imported into the United Kingdom has been contaminated. I have received no representations from retailers or members of the public on the subject of compensation, which would be a matter for the customer and his supplier. My advice to distributors and retailers remains not to sell or offer for sale any Austrian wine of whatever type unless the batch concerned has been previously tested and shown to be clear of contamination.

Sir John Farr asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations he has had on the dangers associated with consuming certain Austrian table wines and the necessary remedial medical antidote.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

Our officials have been in consultation with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, representatives of the trade, the Commission of the European Communities and the Austrian Trade Commission concerning the addition of diethylene glycol to certain Austrian wines. The medical advice available to us is that harmful effects from consuming wines containing the chemical at the levels reported are unlikely to occur but that some ill effects might be possible in exceptional circumstances. The question of any medical treatment necessary in the unlikely event of ill effects occurring would be for the individual doctor to decide. Our Department has issued advice that, as a precautionary measure, the public should not drink any of the suspect wines pending the results of tests currently being undertaken by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Beef

Mr. Body asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tonnes of beef have been sold by the Intervention Board in the last 12 months.

Mr. MacGregor: In the 12 months ending 30 June 1985 the Intervention Board sold 7,200 tonnes of beef.

Sheepmeat

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the difference between the average guaranteed price and the average market price for home-killed sheepmeat in each year since 1973 and in 1985 to date, together with any additional payments to hill farmers and others on account of sheepmeat or wool production and financed directly or indirectly out of public funds.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1985]: From 1973 to October 1980 support arrangements for sheep were provided under the United Kingdom's fat sheep guarantee scheme. The following figures show the difference between the average market price and the guaranteed price in the relevant marketing years.

	p/kg
1973-74	+14·0
1974-75	—
1975-76	—
1976-77	+20·0
1977-78	+9·0
1978-79	+13·0
1979-80	+10·0

These arrangements were superseded on 20 October 1980 by the European Community's sheepmeat regime. Since then support levels have been set by the Council of Ministers and expenditure has been reimbursed from Community funds. The following figures show the difference between the average market price and the guide price in the relevant marketing years.

	p/kg
1981-82	−18·0
1982-83	−56·0
1983-84	−75·0
1984-85	−43·0

Information is not yet available for 1985.

Because the change in arrangements occurred during 1980 there is no comparable figure for 1980-81. However, the difference between the average market price in that year and an average of the guaranteed and guide prices is −15·0 p/kg.

The remainder of the information requested is contained in the "Annual Review of Agriculture 1985" for the most recent years for which data is available and in previous reviews for earlier years. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Civil Service

Mr. Best asked the Prime Minister if she will give the figures for each of the last 10 years for which they are available, both numerically and as a percentage of the whole class, of those leaving each of the top three grades of the Civil Service for reasons other than normal retirement, redundancy or ill health.

The Prime Minister: Statistics of voluntary resignations from the three grades are tabulated as follows. These figures should be read in conjunction with the comments in paragraphs 46-53 of the recent report of the Review Body on Top Salaries (Cmnd. 9525).

* Data for 1984 are provisional at present.

Mr. Best asked the Prime Minister what evidence she has that civil servants are leaving the profession prematurely because of dissatisfaction with salary levels.

The Prime Minister: In 1984 it is estimated that the voluntary resignation rate from the Civil Service was 4·4 per cent., compared with 4·2 per cent. in 1983. Reasons for leaving, in so far as they are known, cover a wide field, including both better pay and prospects offered in the new employment, and also other factors. I also refer my hon. Friend to the recent report of the Review Body on Top Salaries (Cmnd. 9525), paragraphs 46-53 which deal with this on the basis of evidence they took on this question.

Mr. Best asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement of the state of morale in the Civil Service.

The Prime Minister: Paragraph 54 of the eighth report of the Review Body on Top Salaries (Cmnd. 9525) reports that morale in the Civil Service is unfortunately at a low ebb for reasons set out in paragraph 55. It is our earnest hope that this situation will be rectified.

Privatisation

Mr. Blair asked the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report a list of all the privatised undertakings in which Her Majesty's Government now hold a golden share; if she will indicate which Department is responsible for exercising the rights attached to the golden share; and if she will place a copy of each memorandum of association together with appropriate supplementary documentation in the Library.

The Prime Minister: The Government at present hold special shares in the undertakings listed:

Company	Rights exercised by on on behalf of
Amersham International plc	Secretary of State for Energy
British Aerospace plc	Secretary of State for Trade and Industry
British Telecommunications plc	Secretary of State for Trade and Industry
Britoil plc	Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury
Cable and Wireless plc	Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury
Enterprise Oil plc	Secretary of State for Energy
Jaguar plc	Secretary of State for Trade and Industry
Sealink UK Ltd	Secretary of State for Transport

I am arranging for copies of the relevant sections from the articles of association for each company to be placed in the Library of the House today.

South Africa

Mr. Hancock asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government propose to make representations to the South African Government about the imposition of a state of emergency in South Africa; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: As the joint statement by Foreign Ministers issued in Brussels on 22 July made clear, we share the deep concern of our partners at the effects of the declaration of a state of emergency in South Africa, which underlines the urgent need for fundamental reform. We look to the South African Government to lift the state of emergency as soon as possible.

Rosehill Estate, Walsall

Mr. Winnick asked the Prime Minister if she will receive a deputation of tenants from the Rosehill estate, Willenhall, Walsall, to discuss the inability of the local authority to undertake work necessary to improve conditions on the estate; an if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A deputation of tenants from the Rosehill estate has already met officials from the Department of the Environment at the Department's offices on 18 July. The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State has subsequently written to the hon. Member about the issues raised at that meeting. While I understand the concern of the hon. Member I do not think there would be much purpose in me seeing a further deputation of council tenants.

European Council of Foreign Ministers

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister when and in what circumstances qualified majority voting was introduced into meetings of the European Council of Finance Ministers.

The Prime Minister: The voting rules of the Council of Ministers are laid down in the EEC treaty and were therefore accepted by the United Kingdom on accession. The use of unanimous, qualified majority or simple majority voting is indicated in the individual articles which contain provisions for Council action. Finance Ministers' Councils follow the same voting rules as all others. Decisions on the budget are taken by qualified majority by virtue of article 203 of the treaty.

Trustee Savings Banks

Mr. Wilson asked the Prime Minister if (a) between May 1979 and June 1983 and (b) since June 1983, she or her office have been in correspondence with Sir John Read, chairman of the Trustee Savings Bank Central Board, or any other representative of or consultant for the Trustee Savings Bank Central Board or the Trustee Savings Bank England and Wales, on the question of the flotation of trustee savings banks.

The Prime Minister: It is not my usual practice to reveal the existence or not of correspondence with third parties.

Mr. Wilson: asked the Prime Minister what meetings have taken place since June 1983 between herself and Sir John Read, chairman of the Trustee Savings Bank Central Board.

The Prime Minister: There have been no such meetings in relation to the Trustee Savings bank.

Washington (Visit)

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Prime Minister what is the total estimated cost to public funds of her visit to Washington on 25 and 26 July; on what basis the total costs have been apportioned as between her official and non-official engagements during the visit; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Pensions (Nurses and Midwives)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Prime Minister if she will place a copy of her reply to the letter from the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council dated 23 July concerning, inter alia, the calculation of pensions, in the Library.

The Prime Minister: No, it is not my practice to make public correspondence that has been sent to me.

TRANSPORT

Transport Industries (Output and Employment)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the changes in output and employment in each of the transport industries for 1963 to 1973, 1973 to May 1979, and May 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Ridley: Following is the available information for the United Kingdom.

Table 1*(a)* provides the percentage change in the index of output between each of the calendar years specified. Table 1*(b)* gives the percentage change in the number of employees in employment between June in each of these years. Both sets of figures are analysed according to the 1980 Standard Industrial Classification. Figures for May are not available for either series.

Notes:
1. Under SIC, own account road haulage is classified to the industry carrying out the work, which in most cases would not be one of the SIC classes above.
2. Employment figures exclude self employed.
3. Strikes affect comparisons in some cases. For example, there was a lorry drivers' strike in 1979 and the miners' strike in 1984 affected freight transport.

Manchester International Airport

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for the privatisation of Manchester airport.

Mr. Michael Spicer: As stated in the White Paper on airports policy (Cmnd. 9542) published on 5 June, we intend to introduce legislation requiring the larger local authority-owned airports — which would include Manchester — to be formed into companies. Although we shall encourage local authority owners to introduce private capital into their airports, I have no plans to legislate to require this.

Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has concerning the usage of British Airways Manchester to New York air service in comparison with the total potential market for the route within the north of England.

Mr. Michael Spicer: New international services take time to establish. BA began service between Manchester and New York only on 1 April 1985 and it would be premature to attempt any assessment at this stage.

British Airways (Privatisation)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the implications of the settlement reached between British Airways and the Laker Airways liquidator for the viability and timing of the proposed privatisation of British Airways.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The settlement of the Laker liquidator's action clears one hurdle in the way of the privatisation of British Airways. The Government intend that privatisation should take place as soon as possible, but there are legal issues arising out of US anti-trust law still to be resolved before a date can be set.

Fire-retardant Materials

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider requiring the use of fire-retardant materials in the construction of all newly-built coach, bus and train seating; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have already put to the bus and coach industry proposals to require seats and other soft material on new coaches to be of fire-retardant material and I hope it will be possible to bring forward draft regulations later this year.

Statutory responsibility for the safe design of railway rolling stock rests with the operators themselves, and their fire safety measures include the use of fire-retardant materials. A draft British standard code of practice for fire prevention in rolling stock, based on extensive testing, has recently been produced under the chairmanship of the Railway Inspectorate.

Helicopters

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has had discussions with the Civil Aviation Authority regarding the need for new regulations to cover the crash worthiness of civil helicopters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet the Civil Aviation Authority regularly to discuss a range of matters. The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible for airworthiness matters, and as recommended in last year's report of the helicopter airworthiness review panel they are reviewing all aspects of helicopter airworthiness with authorities overseas, both in the USA and in Europe. This review is currently concentrating on the subject of human tolerance to impact and to the acceleration forces in a crash. The CAA and overseas airworthiness authorities will use the results of the review to reassess helicopter design criteria and safety regulations, with a view to ensuring that occupants have as good a chance as possible of surviving a crash.

Aircraft Safety

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will discuss with the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority the possibility of conducting new trials to test safety standards for passengers escaping from aircraft in lifejackets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CAA has statutory responsibility for the testing of passenger evacuation standards on aircraft. I understand it has received no comments to suggest there are any deficiencies in the present arrangements for conducting trials of passenger evacuation for airworthiness certification purposes. However, it keeps these matters under constant review.

Unroadworthy Vehicles

Mr. Pollock asked the Secretary of State for Transport what figures are available for the last convenient period of the number of vehicles found to be in an unroadworthy condition as revealed by MOT testing.

Mrs. Chalker: Based on a 2 per cent. sample of tests carried out at MOT testing garages in 1984 the estimated numbers of vehicles which failed the test were:

		Percentage of the number tested
Motor cycles	241,300	26
Cars and other passenger vehicles	5,195,700	39
Light goods vehicles	100,505	39

American Airlines

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce a decision regarding American Airlines' application to operate daily flights between Manchester and Chicago.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Consultations with the United States Government about this application are due to take place in early August. As soon as an agreement has been reached it will be announced.

Seat Belts

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to encourage the manufacturers of car seat belts to produce belts with a similar type of release operation for use in times of emergency.

Mrs. Chalker: The design of seat belt release mechanisms has, since 1977, been covered by a European standard which requires a button or similar device of a minimum size and coloured red. The mechanism is in a standard position between the front seat and readily accessible in an emergency.

Coaches (Parking)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the Government expect to be able to announce the findings of the review of the need for both on and off-street parking facilities for coaches; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government have given a commitment, in the report "Pleasure, Leisure and Jobs", to a review of the scope for making use of publicly owned land, outside local authority control, for off-street coach parking in connection with tourism and leisure. Any initiatives identified in time for the 1986 season will be announced as soon as possible.

On-street parking is a matter for the Greater London council and the boroughs as the traffic authorities. I understand that the GLC is looking at possibilities for increasing facilities for on-street coach parking, and expects to have proposals in the autumn.

Regional Airports

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has had discussions with representatives of British airlines regarding the proposed emphasis on regional airports in international negotiations on traffic rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The White Paper on airports policy (Cmnd. 954) made it clear that we are ready to discuss with airlines and airport authorities their plans for developing new routes. Such discussions have already taken place and are continuing in relation to Manchester services.

Transport (Safety)

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with existing safety regulations for publicly and privately owned and operated transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Detailed safety regulations cover many aspects of transport operation by road, rail, air and sea, and apply to both public and privately owned operations. By international standards we have an excellent transport safety record, but there are of course many improvements under consideration which will require amendments to the regulations.

Vehicle Registration

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a list of road vehicle registration prefixes showing the local area for which each is issued; and if he will undertake a simplification of the system in such a way as to provide a clearer identification of the place of registration of a vehicle.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This information is most readily available in commercially produced publications and I have asked for copies to be made available in the Library shortly. The registration number format was reviewed in 1982 following an extensive consultation exercise and I see no need for further changes at this time.

Kirkhamgate-Dishforth Motorway

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to make a decision on the route of the Kirkhamgate-Dishforth motorway; and what are the reasons for the delay in reaching a decision on the inspector's report.

Mrs. Chalker: The public inquiry into the proposals lasted for over a year and it has taken us longer than expected to give full consideration to all the points in the inspector's long and detailed report. However, I expect to announce a decision in the autumn.

M3 (Construction Costs)

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer by the Minister of State on Thursday 25 July, when the junctions and flyover at the start of the M3 were constructed; whether the pressure on the walls retaining the motorway embankments and the strength of the carriageways through the junction were matters considered and approved by his Department at the design stage; whether the £3 million cost is additional to the contract price; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I shall write to my hon. and learned Friend.

SCOTLAND

Mantegna Picture

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what help he is giving the National Gallery for Scotland over the acquisition of the Mantegna picture.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend increased the purchase grants of the National Galleries of Scotland by 13 per cent. this year. The trustees have allocated all the resources they would normally spend on old master paintings to the Mantegna and will be prepared to augment this sum from the limited trust funds at their disposal. An application for help has been made to the national heritage memorial fund, the other main source of Government help. The trustees hope that the balance needed to save this signal masterpiece for the nation will be provided by other benefactors.

Council House Building

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate for the number of council houses to be built in Scotland in 1985; and how this compares with 1979.

Mr. Younger: It is not my practice to forecast annual house completions at this stage in the year.

Housing Starts

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of housing starts in Scotland in the public and private sectors, respectively, for 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Younger: The information requested is as follows:

Housing Starts

Year	Public sector	Private sector
1983	3,891	15,267
1984	3,710	14,623

These figures update those shown in table 2 of the Scottish Development Department Statistical Bulletin HSIU No. 13-Q4(84) "Housing Trends in Scotland: Quarter ended 31 December 1984" which was published in May 1985.

One-parent Families

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the latest position as regards the implementation by his Department of the recommendations which affect its responsibilities of the report of the Finer committee on one-parent families.

Mr. Ancram: Recommendations 54 and 59 to 63 are the only parts of the Finer committee report which are specifically directed to the situation in Scotland.

Recommendation 54: since 1979 the Civil Judicial Statistics have been published in a form suggested by the working party on civil judicial statistics which took account of the Finer committee's recommendations.

Recommendations 59 and 61: these recommendations relate to the institution of a system of administrative orders and to family courts. The Government have stated that they have no plans to reconsider these recommendations which were rejected by the previous Government.

Recommendation 60: the Divorce (Scotland) Act 1976 established irretrievable breakdown of marriage as the sole ground of divorce and applied the same criteria for actions of separation. Since 1 May 1984 the sheriff court and the Court of Session have had concurrent jurisdiction in divorce actions under the Divorce Jurisdiction, Court Fees and Legal Aid (Scotland) Act 1983.

Recommendation 62: the recently enacted Family Law (Scotland) Act makes fresh and important provision in the law of Scotland regarding aliment, in accordance with the recommendations of the Scottish Law Commission.

Recommendation 63: the considerations underlying this recommendation continue to be borne in mind. The Scottish Law Commission has reviewed certain key areas of Scots family law which were discussed in the Finer report. Its report on occupancy rights in the matrimonial home and domestic violence formed the basis for the Matrimonial Homes (Family Protection) (Scotland) Act 1981. The recommendations contained in the commission's report on aliment and financial provision have been enacted in the Family Law (Scotland) Act 1985. The Government are considering the commission's report on illegitimacy.

Milk Production

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the amount of milk produced in the first three months of the 1985 quota year; what is the comparison with 1983 levels for the same period; and what percentage above or below quota production is at present.

Mr. John MacKay: No figures are available on the volume of milk produced for direct sale during the first three months of 1985-86 quota year. Wholesale deliveries totalled 373·5 million litres compared to deliveries of 398·5 million litres in the same period in 1983-84, before quotas were introduced. It is estimated that deliveries as a whole were about 2 per cent. above quota.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will maintain the current Scottish share of the milk production quota.

Mr. John MacKay: The distribution of total quota within the United Kingdom and the quota of individual producers was established at the outset of quotas last year, on the basis of historical levels of production and trends.

Any alteration in that basic distribution would affect producers' quotas and this is not proposed.

Refuse Collection

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and which councils in Scotland operate a refuse disposal collection through contract with private companies.

Mr. Ancram: Comprehensive information is not held centrally. I understand, however, that no district councils in Scotland operate their refuse collection services wholly through private companies, although some limited arrangements of this kind may exist in rural areas and on outlying islands. Clydebank, Hamilton, Kilmarnock and Loudoun, Eastwood and Dumbarton district councils contract out virtually all of their refuse disposal services to private companies.

Peterhead Harbours Bill

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why he introduced the Peterhead Harbours (South Bay Development) Order Confirmation Bill before the transcript of the evidence given at the recent parliamentary inquiry was made available to hon. Members.

Mr. Younger: I am required by statute to submit a provisional order to Parliament in a confirmation Bill as soon as conveniently may be following an inquiry into such an order. There is no statutory requirement relating to the transcript of evidence. If, as seems likely, the Bill has to be reintroduced in November, the transcript may, however, be expected to be available.

Islands Councils

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he proposes to announce his response to the report of Sir David Montgomery's committee on the functions of the islands councils.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro) on 23 July 1985. A copy of my detailed response to the committee's recommendations has been placed in the Library.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the locations of privately owned stores which are to be used by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce for the storage of grain in the coming year, giving the capacity of each store and the level of payments from public funds for their use; and if he will indicate which of these stores are additional to 1984's provision.

Mr. John MacKay: Storage in Scotland for intervention grain in the coming year will be taken up as required. Locations, capacities and costs are not yet known.

Torness Power Station

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that Torness power station will not be commissioned until all appropriate safety checks have been satisfactorily completed by the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I am advised by the Health and Safety Commission that the commissioning of Torness nuclear power station cannot commence until a consent has been issued by the Health and Safety Executive on the advice of Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate. The consent will not be issued until the inspectorate is satisfied that it is safe to commission the station.

Children (Prison Detention)

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is satisfied with the current operation of unruly certificates procedure for the detaining of children in prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Children remanded or committed for trial in custody are normally located in accommodation provided by local authorities. Children over 14 will only be remanded to a penal establishment where a court has certified that they are unruly or depraved. The remand of children in penal establishments occurs only exceptionally. There were 130 such "unruly" certificates issued in 1984 (a reduction of 10 per cent. from the figure for 1983).

Improved procedures for consultation aimed at minimising the use of "unruly" certificates were introduced in 1984 and I am not aware of any problems. It is a requirement of prison rules that remand inmates are, so far as possible kept apart from convicted inmates. Children remanded in a penal establishment are so far as possible kept apart form other inmates on remand.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the average length of time children were held in prison on unruly certificates in each of the years 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984; and what were the maximum and minimum lengths of stay in prison on unruly certificates in these same years.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is as follows:

	Average stay (days)	Minimum stay (days)	Maximum stay (days
1983	26	1	108
1984	30	1	163

The figures for years prior to 1983 are not available in the form requested.

Dunblane Bypass

Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) why the announcement of the line of route of the Dunblane bypass has been delayed; and on how many occasions deadlines set by his Department have been missed since the project was first mooted;

(2) if he will now announce the line of route of the Dunblane bypass;

(3) when he expects to begin construction of the Dunblane bypass.

Mr. Ancram: The Scottish Development Department has only now received the consultants' draft report on alternative routes for the bypass, and is giving urgent consideration to its conclusions. I hope it will be possible to publish draft orders for the preferred route before the end of 1985.

It was originally expected that the draft orders would be published in the early summer of this year, but this has not proved possible because of difficulties which the consultants met in completing their studies. The progress of the scheme will depend on how quickly the statutory procedures can be completed and on the availability of finance.

Planning Zones

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of submissions he received in response to his consultation paper on simplified planning zones; and how many bodies were in favour of the proposals in his paper.

Mr. Ancram: Thirty responses were received to the consultation paper issued by the Scottish Development Department on 17 May 1984. General support for the concept of simplified planning zones was expressed in 10 of the responses, although some of these included comments on the details of the proposals. Four responses did not contain views either in favour or against the concept of simplified planning zones.

Housing (Shared Ownership Schemes)

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the allocation and outturn of expenditure by the Housing Corporation in Scotland on shared ownership schemes in each of the years for which figures are available, indicating the names and numbers of housing associations participating.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is as follows:

Year	*Allocation £ million	*Expenditure £ million
1981-82	1·9	1·9
1982-83	5·3	5·3
1983-84†	4·0	0·3
1984-85	3·3	3·3

* The figures represent the proportion of the total programme cost to be met from Housing Corporation funds; this can vary according to the funding method used and the average percentage share of the lenders sold initially.

† The majority of the 1983-84 programme was carried forward to early 1984-85 at the request of the Housing Corporation.

Participating Housing Associations	Programme(s)
Link Housing Association	All programmes
Lowlands Housing Society	All programmes
Port of Leith Housing Association	All programmes
Shetlaven Housing Association	1982-83
Langmuir Housing Association	1982-83 and 1984-85
Grampian Housing Association	1984-85
Hillcrest Housing Association	1984-85

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the amount of money which will be spent on the assisted places scheme in Scotland in the current financial year; and what are the planned limits of expenditure in subsequent years.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 21 March 1985 to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown) at column 607-8.

Scottish National Camps Association

Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what grants have been allocated for the current financial year to the Scottish National Camps Association; and what were the grants for the last three financial years.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is as follows:

	Recurrent grant £	Capital grant £
1982-83	85,200	—
1983-84	92,016	24,796
1984-85	94,778	—
1985-86	85,000	—

Tertiary Education Advisory Committee

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he now expects to receive the report of the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Committee.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The position has not changed since my written answer of 17 July 1985 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Cathcart (Mr. Maxton) at column 83.

The chairman of the Scottish Tertiary Education Advisory Council has informed my right hon. Friend that the council expects to submit its report on the future strategy for higher education in Scotland by about the end of October.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table for the estimated number of additional workers in jobs as employees created from the beginning of 1983 to the end of 1984 after making allowance for the additional number of second jobs and the additional number of places on temporary employment schemes.

Mr. Allan Stewart: [pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1985]: The number of employees in employment in Scotland rose by over 11,000 between December 1982 and December 1984. It is estimated that over the same period the number of participants in special employment and training schemes included in the employees in employment estimates fell by over 13,000. There are no estimates of changes in the number of second jobs over this period.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many public sector jobs there are, at the latest available date in the rural areas of Scotland; and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Younger [pursuant to his reply, 25 July 1985]: The information requested is not available. However, estimates of the number of employees in major parts of the public sector in the area of the Borders, Dumfries and Galloway, Grampian, Highlands, Islands areas and Tayside local authorities (the Scottish regions which cover most of rural Scotland) are set out in the table.

	1979	1985
Non-industrial civil service (at 1 January)	7,850	7,750
Local government (at March)*	74,370	75,600
National health service (at 30 September)	37,050	†39,552

* The 1979 estimate has been adjusted to take account of certain employees first counted on 1981. The 1985 estimate is provisional.

† This estimate relates to September 1984.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Government Expenditure

Mr. Merchant asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the cost to the Government in the fiscal years 1979-80 to 1984-85 of (a) mortgage interest relief, (b) tax allowances on pension contributions, (c) regional subsidies, (d) enterprise zones (rates and tax reliefs) and (e) the business expansion scheme (business start-up scheme), respectively;

(2) what was total Government expenditure as a percentage of gross domestic product in each of the years from 1979-80 to 1984-85; and what proportion (a) mortgage interest relief, (b) tax allowances on pension contributions, (c) regional subsidies, (d) rates and tax relief, associated with enterprise zones and (e) the business expansion scheme or business start-up scheme, represent, respectively, of the total.

Mr. Moore: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Job Creation Cost

Mr. Rowe asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the most recent estimates of the cost per job created by (a) the enterprise allowance scheme, (b) the loan guarantee scheme, (c) the business expansion scheme and (d) regional development grants.

Mr. Peter Rees: The schemes have very different purposes and different means of operation. Estimates of the cost per job of the different schemes are therefore not directly comparable.

Contingency Reserve

Mr. Knox asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present level of the contingency reserve; and what payments have been made from the reserve since January.

Mr. Peter Rees: The public expenditure planning total of £134·2 billion for 1985-86 includes a reserve of £5 billion. It is too early in the financial year to estimate the outturn for the planning total; but the reserve, which was increased from £3 billion to £5 billion at the time of the budget, is expected to be adequate to meet claims on it. An estimate for the outturn on the public expenditure planning total in 1984-85, and hence the claims on the reserve in that year, was published in the Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Economic Policy

Mr. Adley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many letters he has received about the presentation by his Department of Her Majesty's Government's economic policy; and what replies he has sent.

Mr. Peter Rees: Neither my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, nor I have received since the Budget any letters on the presentation of the Government's economic policy.

Taxation

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update to 1985-86, taking account of the proposed child benefit rate for November 1985, the information on tax break-even points, tax-free income and tax thresholds contained in his answer of 6 December 1984 to the hon. Member for Thurrock, (Dr. McDonald) Official Report, columns 246-7.

Mr. Moore: Latest estimates for 1984-85 and 1985-86 are as follows:

	Threshold at current prices	Threshold at 1949-50 prices	Threshold as percentage of average manual earnings	Tax free income at current prices	Tax free income at 1949-50 prices	Tax free income as percentage of average income	Break-even point at current prices	Break-even point at 1949-50 prices	Break-even point as percentage of average manual earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report his latest estimate of the proportion of revenue from taxation accounted for by the different categories of tax on the same basis as in his written answer dated 25 November 1983, Official Report, columns 315-6; and if he will provide similar figures for 1979 and 1973.

Mr. Moore: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess, therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Inland Revenue (Performance Bonus Scheme)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Association of Her Majesty's Inspectors of Taxes, through the council of the Civil Service unions on the performance bonus scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: None.

EC Budget

Mr. Shersby asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he made of the assumptions made by the European Commission for the 1986 preliminary draft budget for the level of world cereal prices and the exchange rate of the United States dollar to the European currency unit; and what is his policy towards the assumptions and their effect on the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: We shall be scrutinising the Commission's assumptions about the ecu:dollar exchange rate and world cereal prices very closely in the discussions about their preliminary draft Budget for 1986 which are just beginning in preparation for the Budget Council in September. The Government will also continue to press in the Agriculture Council for a policy of price restraint for cereals which would help to reduce Community expenditure in this sector.

Variable Import Levies

Mr. Shersby asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in the Official Report the figures for 1984, 1985 and 1986, in thousand million European currency units, total Community receipts of variable import levies charged on third country imports, by principal agricultural commodity, namely; wheat, butter, beef, and so on and by NIMEX chapter.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this detailed information is not readily available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

EC Expenditure

Mr. Shersby asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the fastest growing areas of Government expenditure by broad policy area since Community accession for the total time period and for any convenient sub-periods within the total, comparing these with the growth in agricultural spending by Her Majesty's Government both gross and net of Community refunds, as appropriate, expressed in pound million sterling and compound percentage rates of change.

Mr. Peter Rees: Figures for the main components of the public expenditure planning total, which show an increase over the period 1973-74 to 1984-85, are as follows:

£ billion

	Cash		*Real terms		*Percentage change between 1973-74 and 1984-85 in real terms

Refunds from the European Community are in respect of the UK's net contribution to the Community Budget as a whole and cannot be attributed directly to agricultural expenditure. Figures are for gross agricultural spending.

* Calculated using cash figures adjusted for general inflation as measured by the GDP deflator (base year, 1983-84).

† Excluding domestic agricultural spending under the responsibility of the territorial departments.

Mr. Shersby asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in the Official Report, for 1984, 1985 and estimates for 1986, in thousand million European currency units (a) total spending by the European Communities, (b) total spending by each Community institution, (c) the main policy categories for expenditure by the European Commission and (d) the total of own resources and resources raised by loans from the member states.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Maintenance Payments (Tax Relief)

Ms. Richardson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total sum eligible for tax relief as maintenance payments; how many taxpayers get this relief; and what is the average annual amount on which relief is given.

Mr. Moore: It is estimated that, in 1985-86, £100 million for alimony and £500 million for small maintenance payments will be eligible for tax relief involving 50,000 and 475,000 taxpayers respectively with respective average annual amounts of £2,000 and £1,050.

One-parent Families (Finer Committee)

Ms. Harman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the latest position as regards the implementation by his Department of the recommendations which affect its responsibilities of the report of the Finer committee on one-parent families.

Mr. Moore: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Pension and Life Assurance Funds

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report the figures for 1983 and 1984 of the growth in pension and life assurance funds on the same basis as that given in his written answer dated 7 March 1984, Official Report, column 581; and what information he has for these and the earlier years of the percentage invested outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moore: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Taxation and National Insurance

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the amount of tax and national insurance payable in 1985-86 on the same basis as that given in his answer of 5 April 1984, Official Report, columns 629-630.

Mr. Moore: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the amount deducted by way of interest before charging corporation tax in the current financial year in cash terms and as a proportion of trading profits; and if he will provide an estimate for manufacturing industry and for the corporate sector less production industries.

Mr. Moore: The figures of interest paid by companies and public corporations appear in tables 5.1 and 6.2 respectively of the "National Income Blue Book", together with gross profits. The charge to corporation tax in the current financial year is largely determined by profits, interest, etc. in 1984 and these figures will appear in the 1985 "National Income Blue Book" to be published in September. Figures up to 1983 were published in the 1984 issue. Apart from the separation of the company totals into industrial and commercial companies (table 5.4) and financial companies and institutions (table 5.5), there is no industrial breakdown.

Petroleum Revenue

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average amount of petroleum revenue and other taxes on a barrel of North sea oil as a percentage of the total price at present in the case of a field on which development and depreciation charges have already been exhausted.

Mr. Moore: The average amount of tax and royalties as a percentage of the gross value of North sea oil depends on factors such as the level of operating costs and the amount of production in each chargeable period. The marginal tax and royalty rate for a barrel of oil produced this year from a mature oil field which is paying full rates of tax, assuming no change in operating costs, is 87 per cent.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish a list showing, for each port in Somerset, Devon and Cornwall (a) the number of Customs and Excise staff directly employed on customs duties and (b) the number of boats available for their use;

(2) if he will describe the nature and scope of 24-hour coverage of ports in Somerset, Devon and Cornwall by Customs and Excise staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the years 1979-80 to 1987-88 for each organisation treated as a nationalised industry in at least one year the actual or planned figures, as appropriate, for capital requirements and financing in a form identical to table 5.1 of the public expenditure White Paper, Cmnd. 9428-II;

(2) if he will publish tables for the years 1979-80 to 1985-86, comparable with table 5.1 in the public expenditure White Paper, Cmnd. 9428-II, showing entries or blanks as appropriate for those organisations which have been treated as nationalised industries in at least one of those years.

Mr. Peter Rees: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table in cash terms showing the successive estimates for nationalised industries' total external finance, as in the bottom line of table 5.1 of the public expenditure White Paper, Cmnd. 9428-II, in annual public expenditure White Paper since Cmnd. 7439, together with the eventual outturn.

Mr. Peter Rees: Precise comparisons cannot be made between planned and outturn external finance figures because of a number of changes which have taken place in the composition of the nationalised industry sector and of external finance. Available information is as follows:

1. For each White Paper the first figure shows estimated outturn for the then current year. Figures for the following years show expenditure plans.
2. Figures exclude definitional changes in external finance.

* In Cmnds. 7439, 7841, 8175 expenditure plans were presented on a volume basis. These figures have been converted to cash using GDP deflators.

† Figures for British Aerospace excluded beyond 1979-80 from this and subsequent White Papers.

‡ Figures for National Freight Company excluded from 1981-82. Figures for BNOC and British Transport Docks Board excluded from 1983-84. In subsequent White Papers figures for BNOC are included but from 1983-84 take account of disposal of former exploration and production interests. Civil Aviation Authority figures included for the first time.

¶ Water Authorities included for the first time.

● Figures for BT and British Airways excluded from 1985-86 and for British Shipbuilders (Warshipbuilding Division) and the National Bus Company from 1986-87. London Regional Transport figures included for the first time.

■ Outturn figures are taken from Cmnd. 9428 for years to 1983-84 but CAA is only included from 1983-84 and Water Authorities from 1984-85. Privatised industries are included up to the point of privatisation. The 1984-85 outturn is taken from Cmnd. 9569, the 1984-85 Cash Limits Provisional Outturn White Paper.

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table in cash terms showing, for each of the years 1979-80 to 1984-85 for each of the organisations which has been included in at least one year in the equivalent of table 5.3 of the public expenditure White Paper, Cmnd. 9428-II, those asset sales not included in the special sale of assets programme; whether these proceeds have directly accrued to the Exchequer or have remained in the relevant businesses; and, where these have been set, if he will publish the target proceeds from such asset sales which have been set in the appropriate investment and Financing Review.

Mr. Peter Rees: All industries dispose of fixed assets which are surplus to operational requirements. The receipts from such sales, and other asset disposals which do not score as special sales of assets, are retained by the industry concerned, adding to its internal resources. The level of such asset sales, by industry, for the years requested has been:

† Provisional outturn.

Although the potential for such asset sales is taken into account in the setting of external financing limits, formal disposal targets are not set.

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table of special asset sales for the years 1979-80 to 1985-86, providing individual items under each of the sub-headings (a) privatised nationalised industries and public shareholdings, (b) other asset sales and (c) revenue offsets.

Mr. Moore: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) on 1 July 1985, at columns 41-2, which covers the years 1979-80 to 1984-85. So far in 1985-86, the residual shareholding in British Aerospace has been sold, and there has been the second instalment payable in respect of the British Telecom sale.

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in the Official Report those organisations treated as nationalised industries with negative external financing limits; and if he will place appropriate documentation in the Library, indicating the amounts involved, the terms on which such deposits are made and any Government guidelines on this subject matter.

Mr. Peter Rees: Table 5.5 of the 1985 public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9428) gives a list of nationalised industries and their 1985-86 external financing limits (EFLs). The further information requested by the hon. Member is to be found in appendices 4 and 7 to the first report from the Treasury and Civil Service Committee, session 1983-84 (HC 170). Copies of this report and the 1985 public expenditure White Paper are available in the Library.

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer which nationalised industries present their annual accounts on a current cost basis and which on a historic cost basis; and whether it is his policy to secure a greater degree of uniformity.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: All nationalised industries currently produce main or supplementary accounts on a current cost basis. In 1984, current cost main accounts were produced by the Electricity Council, Central Electricity Generating Board, British Gas Corporation, Post Office and British Airports Authority. Nationalised industries have rightly given prominence in their accounts to the effect of changing prices. Wherever appropriate, the Government's policy is to encourage progress towards greater uniformity in nationalised industries' financial reporting.

British Gas Corporation

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the financial targets, (b) the external financing limits and (c) the performance aims, which have been set for the British Gas Corporation since 1972; and if he will provide comparable outturn figures.

Mr. Peter Rees: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Drugs

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a list showing, for each year since 1979 (a) the number and (b) the estimated value of seizures of smuggled drugs by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, excluding seizures at London Heathrow airport.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a list showing for each port and airport, excluding London Heathrow airport (a) the number and (b) the estimated value of seizures of smuggled drugs by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise during 1984.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that this information is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Moreover, it would not be in the public interest for this information to be disclosed.

Water Authorities

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the financial targets, (b) external financing limits and (c) the performance aims which have been set for the regional water authorities since the publication of Cmnd. 7131 for nationalised industries.

Mr. Peter Rees: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Electricity Industry

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the financial targets, (b) the external financing limits, and (c) the performance aims, which have been set for the Electricity Council, the Central Electricity Generating Board and area boards since the publication of Cmnd. 7131.

Mr. Peter Rees: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Objects in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Faulds asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement before the House rises for the summer recess on Vote arrangements governing the acceptance of works of art and museum objects in lieu of tax.

Mr. Peter Rees: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones).

Sterling

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the new central rate for sterling against other exchange rate mechanism currencies and the ecu.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information requested is as follows:

Notional central rates against sterling (since 22 July 1985)*

	Rate
ECU	1,8008
Deutschemark	4·03089
French franc	12·3607
Italian lira	2,738·28

Danish Krone	14·6378
Irish punt	1·30481

Personal Data (Transfers)

Dr. Marek asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to ensure that, when personal data are transferred from Government Departments or other organisations to the Inland Revenue, such transfers are fully recorded and documented by the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Moore: It would not be practicable for the Inland Revenue to record and document each occasion on which personal data are transferred to the Department by a third party. The Inland Revenue is, however, setting up a registration system under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Overseas Investment

Mr. Strang asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total of overseas investment for each of the last four quarters; and what were the comparable figures six years ago.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Overseas investment for the second quarter of 1985 is not yet available. The figures for United Kingdom private investment overseas for the four previous quarters and the corresponding quarters six years ago will be found on page 83 of the June edition of "Economic Trends", published by the CSO. However, the portfolio investment component of the figure for the first quarter of 1985 is revised in the Institutional Investment press notice, published by the CSO on 19 July 1985.

Trustee Savings Bank

Mr. Wilson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if his Department has any objection in principle to the Trustee Savings bank central board giving full discount on shares to the present depositors of trustee savings banks when the trustee savings banks are floated as public limited companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Government consider that this is a matter for the TSB central board to decide, and the TSB Act 1985 makes due provision for the board to do so.

Mr. Wilson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if any Minister or official in his Department participated in any way in the working groups established by Trustee Savings bank central board to examine matters connected with the possible flotation of trustee savings banks.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No Treasury Minister or official has participated in working groups set up by the Trustee Savings bank central board for this purpose. The Treasury and the central board did, however, work closely in preparing the recent legislation.

Mr. Wilson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a timetable showing the dates of formal meetings between Ministers and representatives of the Trustee Savings bank central board on the issue of floating the trustee savings banks as a public limited company.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No.

Mr. Wilson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if Ministers of his Department or officials ever asked the trustees of the Trustee Savings bank Scotland, in written form or verbally, if they had obtained legal opinion on who owns a trustee savings bank;

(2) when his Department was first aware that the Trustee Savings bank central board had obtained a legal opinion from John Murray QC on the question of ownership of a trustee savings bank in Scotland;

(3) if his Department has at any time since May 1979 contributed any view to any Trustee Savings bank central board or subsidiary working group on the question of the correct legal handling of the produce of the trustee savings banks in the event that trustee savings banks are transformed to public limited companies;

(4) how many times (a) between April 1979 and July 1983 and (b) since July 1983 the Ministers in his Department met official representatives of the Trustee Savings banks central board;

(5) if Ministers in his Department or officials ever asked the Trustee Savings bank central board, in written form or verbally, if they had obtained legal opinion on the question, in Scottish law, of who owns a trustee savings bank;

(6) what study was made by Ministers in his Department and officials of the rules of the Trustee Savings bank, Scotland, and in particular rule 3(3) before embarking on enabling legislation aimed at the reorganisation of the trustee savings banks into a public limited company;

(7) how many times (a) between April 1979 and July 1983 and (b) since July 1983 Ministers in his Department have met trustees of the Trustee Savings bank, Scotland;

(8) how many meetings there were at official-only level between his Department and Trustee Savings bank central board members or representatives between April 1979 and July 1983; and how many meetings were held at this level between July 1983 and the present date;

(9) when his Department received a copy of the legal opinion of John Murray QC, first handed to the Trustee Savings bank central board in April 1979;

(10) when he reached the conclusion that in Scots law a trustee savings bank was not owned by its depositors; and if he will make a statement;

(11) if he has sought advice from outside the Government as to the compatibility of the flotation of trustee savings banks, as it might affect the rights of depositors, with the United Kingdom's international treaty obligations; and if he will make a statement;

(13) if he will make a statement on the letter dated 27 April 1982 received by his Department from an authorised person on the Trustee savings bank central board; whose signature was on the letter; and what reference the letter made to legal opinion regarding the ownership in Scots law of a trustee savings bank;

(14) if any requests were received from any working group of the Trustee Savings bank central board or a subsidiary of the central board for Treasury or ministerial guidance or advice on questions of the ownership of a trustee savings bank or the right of any category of person or persons to the produce of a trustee savings bank; and if he will make a statement;

Mr. Ian Stewart: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Private Health Insurance Companies

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost to the Revenue of the tax concessions to private health insurance companies.

Mr. Moore: It is not possible to distinguish private health insurance companies from other types of insurance company. Insurance of any sort if not a qualifying activity under the business expansion schemes.

Private Hospitals and Clinics

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total cost to the Revenue of tax concessions involving the establishment of private hospitals and clinics.

Mr. Moore: The hon. Member may have in mind tax relief under the business expansion scheme. About £4 million of the £100 million invested under the scheme in 1983-84 went into companies operating nursing homes or private hospitals. Information for 1984-85 is as yet too incomplete to provide a reliable estimate. At an average level of relief of 50 per cent., this represents about £2 million revenue cost.

Asset Sales Programme

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for each of the years 1979-80 to 1984-85 and by identifiable item within the public expenditure programme, those asset sales which are excluded from the special asset sales programme; and if he will relate those figures to the information contained in the annual public expenditure White Papers and the national income accounts Blue Book.

Mr. Peter Rees: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Pawsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will give the reasons for increasing the minimum premium bond to £10;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect of the increase in the minimum premium bond to £10 on the sale of bonds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Privatisation

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will place in the Library details of the number and proportion of shares in public corporations privatised during the period 1979 to the present issued at quotation to employee shareholders and the details and costs of the schemes which were funded by (a) the company and (b) the Exchequer; and if he will state which Vote the Exchequer funding was accounted under;

(2) if he will place in the Library a list giving the dates of all privatisation share issues from 1979 to the present, distinguishing between those issued by tender and those at fixed prices, together with details of schemes for promoting small shareholding, and the cost of such schemes including details of the initial allocation of shares by size band in all cases, the percentage of applications received under each size band, an analysis by size band of the compilation of the share register and the latest available figures.

Mr. Moore: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Capital Transfer Tax

Mr. McCrindle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Government expect to be able to announce the findings of the inquiry into the arrangements for accepting works of art in lieu of capital transfer tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Rees: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, West (Mr. Jones).

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Pendry asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will examine the circumstances under which, under the enterprise allowance scheme, unemployed people who have set up their own successful business and who are in receipt of the £40 per week allowance, may have to repay the whole amount because of the effect of the rules of assessment to income tax under schedule D, case I and the incidence of class IV national insurance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Moore: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Departmental Committees of Inquiry

Mr. Eggar asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make it his practice to place in the Library an annual report of the number and nature of departmental committees of inquiry established by his Department;

(2) if he will estimate the cost of providing the information requested by the hon. Member for Enfield, North about departmental committees of inquiry referred to in the replies of 1 May, Official Report, columns 141-42 and 24 July;

(3) if he is satisfied with the manner in which records relating to departmental committees of inquiry established by his Department are maintained.

Mr. Hayhoe: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy in the Library.

Asset Valuation

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps Her Majesty's Government take to satisfy themselves regarding the procedures and practices adopted for asset valuation in the electricity supply, gas and water industries, and, in particular, that they provide a satisfactory basis for reporting profitability and setting financial targets.

Mr. Peter Rees: The policies and methods used to value assets are set out in the industries' annual reports and accounts. The industries' auditors, who are appointed by the relevant Secretary of State, report whether in their opinion the accounts, which include values for assets, have been properly prepared in order to show a true and fair view of the profit for the period. Financial targets are based on the asset values given in the accounts.

Directors

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all those privatised enterprises in which the Government are entitled to appoint directors; if he will give the names and terms of office of those so appointed; if he will indicate the occasions on which those Government directors have conferred with Her Majesty's Government in their capacity as Government directors; if he will place copies of their job descriptions, terms of reference and letters of appointment in the Library; and what part these directors play, where appropriate, in ensuring that the safeguards enshrined in golden shares are being, and will prospectively be, adhered to.

Mr. Moore: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many jobs have been created by the business expansion scheme; and what is the average cost of each job created.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 1 July 1985, c. 44]: I regret the delay in providing a reply. No official estimate is available of the number of new jobs created as a result of investment under the business expansion scheme. However, some 12,000 people were employed in 495 of the companies in which investment was made in 1983-84: similar information about the other companies, over 100, in which investment was made is not available. The revenue cost of the scheme in that year is estimated at £50 million. It is too early to provide information in respect of 1984-85 investments.

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average failure rate among firms who have received support from the business expansion scheme; and how these figures compare with the average failure rate of small businesses in general.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 1 July 1985]: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Mr. Dewar asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many companies in Scotland benefited from assistance under the business expansion scheme in the last year for which records are available; and what proportion of (a) the total number of United Kingdom payments made under the scheme were in Scotland.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply,4 July 1985, c. 264]: I regret the delay in providing a reply. The latest estimates are that in 1983-84 investment of just over £100 million was made under the scheme in just over 600 companies. Of these, 51 companies were in Scotland and these companies between them raised £4·6 million under the scheme. Detailed information in respect of 1984-85 is not yet available.

Average Earnings

Mrs. Roe asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the number of minutes or hours of work a male manual labourer on average earnings needed to complete in each of the years 1975 to 1985, respectively, in order to earn the average retail price in that year of the following items (a) weekly rent of a three-bedroomed council dwelling, (b) weekly mortgage repayment on a newly built semi-detached house, (c) five gallons of petrol, (d) monthly second class railway season ticket Brighton-Victoria, (e) large loaf of bread, (f) 20 cigarettes, (g) one pint of beer, (h) one bottle of whisky, (i) dinner for two in a restaurant, (j) a dishwasher, (k) a pair of shoes, (l) oil central heating for a three-bedroomed dwelling for one week and (m) two pounds of lamb.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 15 July 1985, c. 42]: I regret that this information could not be supplied in full except at disproportionate cost.

Personal Incomes

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table on the same lines as given in his reply of 6 March 1984, Official Report, column 501 of the estimated percentage of each income band benefiting from mortgage interest relief (a) with investment income and (b) without.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 18 July 1985, c. 258]: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will bring up to date the figures in his written reply dated 27 March 1984, Official Report, columns 105-6, concerning the mortgage advances and the price of dwellings together with the estimated average cost of mortgage interest tax relief per mortgagee in the current financial year and the assumed average rate of interest;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for (a) single persons, (b) married persons with one earner and (c) married persons with two earners each aged (i) under 65 years and (ii) 65 years and over, the estimated number of incomes in each income range starting at a lower limit of £2,000, and the total tax, as a proportion of total income, excluding family income supplement.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 18 July 1985, c. 259]: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Age Allowance

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the yield from the abolition of age allowances for (a) married couples and (b) single persons; and if he will include in each case the cost of abolishing the income limit by abolishing the clawback.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 18 July 1985, c. 258]: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Taxable Income

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the estimated number of earning wives and (a) the number of taxpaying wives ranged by the couples' joint taxable income and of wives ranged by wife's income, on the same basis as in his predecessor's written answer dated 28 March 1983, Official Report, column 59.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 19 July 1985, c. 258]: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Married Women

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table on the lines of his predecessor's written answer dated 28 March 1983, Official Report, column 59, showing the number and cost of wives' earnings election at various levels of joint total income under the existing tax regime and under an alternative which provided for (a) an increase in married and single allowances to £4,500 and £2,250, respectively, (b) two reduced rate bands of £1,000 at 10 per cent. and 20 per cent. respectively, (c) a standard rate band of £5,000 at 30 per cent, followed by (d) three higher rate bands of £4,000 and four of £5,000 all in 5 percentage point steps, but making no provision for any other allowances.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, c. 286]: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Early Leaver Entitlements

Mr. Walters asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to introduce fiscal incentives to seek to encourage pension organisations to preserve and revalue early leaver entitlements.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: The Social Security Bill 1985 will require pension schemes to revalue the deferred pensions of early leavers by the increase of prices up to 5 per cent. per annum compound, and it is intended that this will take effect from 1 January 1986 for pension rights accrued on or after 1 January 1985.

Married and Single Person Allowance

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the estimated cost to the Exchequer of raising the married and single person allowances to £4,500 and £2,250, respectively; and how much of this would represent a parallel increase in the wife's earnings allowance.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Income Tax

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue is raised through income tax on the difference between the relevant personal allowance and (a) £4,500 for a married person and (b) £2,250 for a single person.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: I regret that it has not been possible to provide an answer before the summer recess. Therefore, I shall write to the hon. Member and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how much revenue is lost by (a) wife's earnings election and (b) wife's earnings allowance;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the estimated cost of wife's earnings allowance by tax unit income bands in the current financial year.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his replies, 22 July 1985]: The information is as follows:

(a) The cost of the wife's earnings election is estimated to be £200 million in a full year at 1985-86 levels of income.

(b) The following table shows the latest estimates of the cost of the wife's earned income allowance in a full year at 1985-86 levels of income and allowances.

Occupational Pension Funds

Mr. Eggar asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will clarify the present practice of the Inland Revenue concerning surpluses that may arise in occupational pension funds.

Mr. Moore: I am happy to take this opportunity to clear up any misunderstanding that may have arisen concerning the Inland Revenue's attitude towards pension scheme refunds.

Occupational pension schemes which are approved by the Inland Revenue benefit from tax reliefs and exemptions. Not only do contributions to the fund attract relief but, once invested, those contributions can build up free of tax. Furthermore, on retirement an employee may, if the rules of the scheme so permit, commute a significant part of the pension and take it as a tax-free lump sum. In return, schemes must satisfy certain conditions which are intended, broadly speaking, to ensure that such arrangements are set up to establish retirement benefits, and for no other purpose.

One of these conditions is that the funds should be alienated from the employer. This is to protect the interests of the scheme members. Another condition is that contributions to the scheme should not be excessive. This is to protect the Exchequer: without such a control, companies could park spare profits in their scheme and so defer, perhaps for many years, a corporation tax liability. So schemes are required to provide the Inland Revenue with an actuarial valuation of their assets every three or five years.

Even with expert actuarial advice it can be difficult to establish the correct level of contributions. Pension schemes are very long-term arrangements. And most promise pension rights linked to length of service and final salary. If the actuary's assumptions about investment returns turn out to be too pessimistic, schemes can easily become temporarily over-funded.

Where a surplus is not too large, the Revenue is usually able to accept it until the next valuation is due, as a temporary fluctuation in the long-term fortunes of the scheme. If special measures are needed, a small temporary reduction in contributions — usually employers' contributions—is generally enough to reduce the surplus to an acceptable level by the time of the next valuation. If that is insufficient, a reduction in the long-term contribution rate may be all that is needed. But where the surplus is very large, in relation to the scheme's liabilities, immediate action may be required if the exempt approved status of the scheme is not to be put at risk. This may take the form of improvements in scheme benefits (although the Revenue no longer insist on this in all cases) or a complete suspension of contributions by the employer and, if necessary, the employees.

If a complete contributions holiday for a period of, say, five years would still fail to achieve the desired result the Revenue might require part of all of the surplus to be refunded to the employer. But such cases will be very rare: no one should assume that a refund will automatically be permitted if a surplus would remain after a five year contributions holiday.

The crucial question is not whether a surplus is large enough to qualify for permission to be refunded. On the contrary, the question is whether the surplus is so large that special measures must be taken to deal with it—and, if so, what those measures should be.

The employer's financial position does not become relevant for these purposes until the question for decision is whether or not a surplus can be reduced to an acceptable level by means of a complete contribution holiday for five years. In some cases, the appropriate remedy might be a longer contributions holiday. In other, a refund might be a preferable solution.

Finally, I should like to make it clear that these considerations will apply equally to continuing schemes and to schemes which are wound up and then replaced by a new scheme. Clearly there is no reason to object to the reconstruction of a company's pension scheme. But if, as part of that reconstruction, funds are extracted by the company, the Revenue reserve the right to withhold approval of the new scheme—or, if it has already been approved, to withdraw such approval.

Loans

Dr. Twinn asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he proposes to make any changes to the loan terms and facilities offered by the National Loans Fund and the Public Works Loan Board.

Mr. Ian Stewart: We have recently completed a review of the terms and facilities offered by the National Loans Fund and the Public Works Loan Board, and decided to make certain improvements in lending arrangements. These are designed to reduce interest rates for borrowers, and to increase the flexibility of the facilities offered.

Interest rates charged on NLF lending are governed by section 5 of the National Loans Act 1968 as amended by the Finance Acts 1982 and 1983. There is no room for a reduction in fixed interest rates from the levels charged at present, which already reflect the minimum rates consistent with the Act. However, we have concluded that interest rates on variable rate loans made by the NLF and PWLB can and should be reduced. In future the rates on variable loans will be calculated on a formula designed to reflect more closely the rates at which the Government itself could borrow. This will be calculated by reference to eligible bill rates and inter-bank rates. NLF temporary lending and deposit rates will also in future be based on this formula. The new rates will apply as soon as the necessary arrangements for calculating and monitoring the revised variable rate formula can be put in place.

Further changes are being made to improve the flexibility of NLF variable rate facilities. The maturity range will be extended to 1-10 years (previously 3-5 years); provision will be made for one and six month roll-over periods (previously three months only); and there will be an option to convert to fixed rate terms at any roll-over point. New arrangements for premature repayment for refinancing existing loans, including conversion from fixed to variable interest rates, will be introduced. The minimum advance from the NLF temporary lending facility will be reduced from £5 million to £1 million.

DEFENCE

RAF Greenham Common

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any accidents involving B47 aircraft have occurred at Royal Air Force, Greenham common since 1955.

Mr. Lee: During the period 1954-64, when B47s were based at RAF Greenham common, the United States authorities have stated that there were two accidents. The first occurred in February 1958 when a parked B47 was hit by a taxi-ing training aircraft. The second occurred in February 1963 when a B47 crashed on landing.

Military Aircraft (Accident Statistics)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether any accidents involving United States air force aircraft carrying nuclear weapons have occurred in the United Kingdom since 1955;

(2) whether any accidents involving United States air force or Royal Air Force aircraft resulting in the release into the atmosphere, into water or into the ground of radioactive materials have occurred in the United Kingdom since 1955.

Mr. Lee: There have been no such accidents involving RAF aircraft, and the United States authorities have confirmed that there have been no such accidents involving USAF aircraft either.

Gurkha Garrison, Hong Kong

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to pay an official visit to the Gurkha garrison in Hong Kong.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to pay such a visit.

Housing Stock

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give more details of the plans to reduce Ministry of Defence owned housing stock in Portsmouth, Fareham and Gosport.

Mr. Lee: The Ministry of Defence is currently not in a position to give more details of the plans to reduce its housing stock in Portsmouth, Fareham and Gosport. Ministry of Defence officials met the Department of the Environment Minister for Housing and Construction on 24 July 1985 to discuss the possibility of making available to Gosport borough council a number of houses on the Rowner Estate. A further statement will be made once detailed plans have been finalised.

Hermetic Metal

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much was spent by his Department in 1984-85 on the purchase of hermetic metal packages for hybrid micro-electronic circuits; and what was the value of such supplies from United Kingdom manufacturers.

Mr. Butler: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Crown Proceedings Act

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men or women or their families have made representations to his Department regarding section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1974, either (a) individually, (b) through a representative or (c) through their Member of Parliament in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lee: Since 1979 my Department has received a total of 13 representations by former members of the armed forces and the families of current and former members about the general effect of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947. The figures broken down by year are:

Year	Number
1982	1 (individually)
1984	5 (four individually and one individually and through a Member of Parliament)
1985*	7 (all through Members of Parliament)

* To date.

These figures do not include parliamentary questions or inquiries relating to individual cases. The figure for 1985 includes one case originally raised in 1984 and also included in the figure for that year.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the current review of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1974 began; when it is expected to be completed; what form it has taken; whether evidence was sought from men orwomen or their families disabled or killed whilst in the forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: An interdepartmental working group of officials from the Ministry of Defence and other Government Departments concerned was established in October 1983 to review the operation and effects of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947. The working group's findings are currently being considered by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence, and an announcement will be made as soon as decisions are taken.

While the working group did not take evidence in a formal way, it did take account of all the views which have been expressed both by former members of the armed forces and the families of current and former members who have written to the Ministry of Defence during the review, and by members of the public, and not least by Members of Parliament.

Medical Services

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Defence what co-operation there is between private hospitals and Army medical services in the Frimley, Aldershot and Camberley areas of the south-east district.

Mr. Lee: There are no formal arrangements between private hospitals and the army medical services in the Frimley, Aldershot and Camberley areas. Occasionally service patients are referred to private hospitals for investigations using equipment which is not readily available elsewhere.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Defence what categories of medical services are currently provided by civilians for Army personnel in the Frimley, Aldershot and Camberley areas of the south-east district.

Mr. Lee: None. However, in an emergency, a service man could be admitted to a local NHS hospital.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian personnel are employed in ancillary and administrative roles in the provision of medical services to the Army in the Frimley, Aldershot and Camberley areas of the south-east district.

Mr. Lee: There are currently 256 civilian personnel employed in ancillary and administrative roles in the provision of defence medical services in the Frimley, Aldershot and Camberley areas.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what Army medical centres there are in the Frimley, Aldershot and Camberley areas of the south-east district;

(2) what medical services are provided by Army medical centres in the Frimley, Aldershot and Camberley areas of the south-east district.

Mr. Lee: In these areas there is a medical reception station at RMA Sandhurst and nine unit medical centres, all of which provide primary medical care of service personnel; examples are routine medical procedures, immunological procedures, routine needs and examinations etc., medical cover for sporting events and military exercises. The Cambridge military hospital, Aldershot provides a full range of secondary medical care.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Defence what co-operation there is between National Health Service and Army medical services in the Frimley, Aldershot and Camberley areas of the south-east district.

Mr. Lee: The Cambridge military hospital accepts for treatment a large number of civilians from the Aldershot, Farnham, Farnborough and Fleet areas. There is also some liaison with Frimley Park hospital regarding paediatrics, medical surgery, dermatology, psychiatric and psychological cases.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Defence what further consideration he has given to the use by his Department of National Health Service resources and services.

Mr. Lee: The primary care of service men is almost always provided by the defence medical services, and this arrangement will continue.

There is considerable co-operation between service hospitals and the NHS at local level and there is no intention to make this interchange the subject of direct central control.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Defence what further consideration he has given to the use by his Department of private sector medical resources and services.

Mr. Lee: Service doctors and other staff are required for war and they must be trained professionally and militarily for their war role. The care of service patients in peace is a fundamental element of that training and cannot be contracted out to the private sector. It is not, therefore, practical for private sector medical services to play a part in the medical support of the armed services except in a very limited way, such as providing occasional facilities for investigations not otherwise available in service hospitals or the NHS. However, doctors, nurses and other medical personnel employed in the private sector are more than welcome to apply to join the TA or other reserve formations.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the defence medical services which was recently submitted to him by Sir Henry Yellowlees;

(2) what were the main findings and recommendations of the report on defence medical services which was recently submitted to him by Sir Henry Yellowlees.

Mr. Lee: A statement on the first part of Sir Henry Yellowlees' report is provided in the statement on the Defence Estimates 1985 Part 1 paragraph 528. Further to that, details of the recommendations in the second part and the current position, are contained in the House of Commons Defence Committee's report on commitments and resources and Defence Estimates 1985-86 Volume III dated 10 June 1985. It is not appropriate to place a copy of Sir Henry Yellowlees' report in the Library.

Prosthetic Services

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Defence what further consideration he has given to the recommendation in exercise Lean Look, (DOGD 85/03) that prosthetic services should be transferred from the Royal Army Dental Corps to contractors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The position remains as set out in the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Midlothian (Mr. Eadie) on 17 June 1985 at column 38.

Ulster Defence Regiment

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the Ulster Defence Regiment have been convicted of criminal offences.

Mr. Lee: Information covering all types of criminal offences is not available. However, since 1970 nine UDR members or ex-members have been convicted of murder and six of manslaughter. In addition, some 90 have been convicted of assault since 1978. The great majority of these offences were of a domestic nature.

Hercules Aircraft

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the cost to date and the estimated cost to the end of the calendar year of the use of Hercules aircraft in Ethiopia.

Mr. Lee: The cost of the airlift operation from November 1984 to the end of July 1985 is estimated to be £13·5 million, of which £9 million is being met by the Ministry of Defence and £4·5 million by the Overseas Development Administration. The cost of continuing the airlift operation until the end of the calendar year is estimated at £7·5 million, to be divided equally between the Ministry of Defence and the Overseas Development Administration.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence, why the cost of the use of Hercules aircraft in Ethiopia comes out of the defence budget.

Mr. Lee: As an exceptional case, it was agreed that the Ministry of Defence would fund the whole cost of the airlift operation in Ethiopia for the initial deployment of three months. When the deployment was subsequently extended it was agreed that the cost would be shared equally by the Ministry of Defence and the Overseas Development Administration.

Army Records

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has yet reached a decision on the proposal to relocate the Army manning and record and regimental pay offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler: I regret that I am not yet in a position to make a statement about the proposals to relocate the Army's manning and record offices and regimental pay offices but I hope to be able to do so shortly and will of course inform my hon. Friend and others of the decision that has been reached then.

Boarding School Allowance

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has yet received the report of the interdepartmental study of the effects on service men and other Government employees of the giving of boarding school allowance for tax purposes.

Mr. Lee: We have made some progress in this matter but interdepartmental studies are not yet complete.

Polaris

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether paragraphs 45-46 of Defence Open Government Document 80/23, about Polaris, remain valid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: The possibility of extending the useful life of our existing Polaris force well into the next century was considered, along with a range of other options, during the detailed evaluation which led to the Government's decision to purchase Trident as the successor to the current United Kingdom strategic deterrent force. The main aspects of that evaluation process were set out in Defence Open Government Document 80/23, which still remains essentially valid today.

In order to ensure that the Polaris force, now improved by the Chevaline programme, will continue to provide a credible deterrent until the mid-1990s when it is to be replaced by Trident, we are currently engaged in a missile remotoring programme. This programme has demonstrated many of the potential problems and expense of a project unique to the United Kingdom; nevertheless, we are confident that the outcome will be successful and that the remotored missiles will have a substantial life expectancy. It could be argued that the new motors might have provided a core stock for a future strategic missile system based on the Polaris model, but the missile motors are only one element of the missile, and of course a smaller proportion of the total weapon system.

To maintain the Polaris system as a credible deterrent beyond the turn of the century, it would have been necessary to replace all other missile associated components together with aging sub-systems such as guidance, fire control, missile launching and test equipment and to renew the whole range of related shore support and training equipments. It would also have been necessary to buy additional Chevaline elements to support the force, and to extend the life of missile processing facilities at the Clyde submarine base.

Even if a United Kingdom replacement programme on these lines proved successful, the overall weapon system effectiveness would not have given a sufficient assurance of credibility much beyond the 1990s. Because the range of a Polaris A3 missile is so much less than that of Trident D5, submarines equipped with a Polaris-based system would have been constrained to operate in a much smaller sea area, in the face of Soviet anti-submarine warfare (ASW) capabilities, which are expected to improve over the next decade.

In addition, the Soviet Union is currently making substantial improvements to its anti-ballistic missile (ABM) defences within the provisions of the 1972 ABM treaty, as amended by the 1974 protocol. Unless these improvements fall well short of our expectations, the capability of the Chevaline payload will prove inadequate to overcome the ABM defences we expect to see deployed in the mid-1990s.

It would also be misleading to suppose that a force based on Polaris could be deployed without replacing the Resolution class submarines, which would all be over 30 years old by the turn of the century. The fact remains that by the next century we will require improved sonars and a modern propulsion system based on the new pressurised water reactor (PWR2) to enable us to stay ahead of developing Soviet ASW capabilities and to maintain the standards of invulnerability required from a strategic nuclear deterrent. Only a new class of submarine can meet this requirement.

As we indicated in DOGD 82/1, even if we had opted for a smaller missile than Trident D5 it would still have made sense to construct a submarine hull of sufficient size to cater for a larger missile at some time in the future. Moreover, we have had no capability in the production of strategic weapon systems since the 1960s, and the research and development programmes and subsequent flight trials would have taken a great deal of time and would have entailed considerable risks.

Doubts might also have been cast on the credibility of a unique United Kingdom system. For all these reasons it is therefore doubtful whether the capital cost of a new Polaris missile-based system would have been any cheaper than our Trident D5 force, and through-life running costs would almost certainly have been considerably higher, all this for a much less effective system.

With Trident D5 we will be continuing the highly successful co-operation with the United States which we have enjoyed for over two decades. It is our safest, wisest and most cost-effective course.

Secretary of State (Visit to Washington)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost to public funds of his visit to Washington on 22 July.

Mr. Heseltine: I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Valuation

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those of his Department's establishments and properties of which a valuation has been undertaken during the last 12 months.

Mr. Lee: Valuations were made of the following factories before they were vested in Royal Ordnance plc on 2 January 1985.

Birtley
Bishopton
Blackburn
Bridgwater
Chorley
Enfield
Featherstone
Glascoed
Leeds
Nottingham
Patricroft
Powfoot
Radway Green
Summerfield
Wrexcot
Waltham Abbey (South)

In addition, informal valuations for management purposes are provided by the Property Services Agency as necessary.

RAF Trainers

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will publish in the Official Report the criteria upon which he based his total acquisition costs in assessing the costs of the Tucano and PC 9 Royal Air Force trainers.

Mr. Butler: The total acquisition costs used in assessing the bids for the Tucano and PC9 comprised the purchase price of 130 aircraft, two forward fuselages for simulators, and technical publications, together with the cost of initial spares, ground support equipment, additional simulator facilities, reserve engines and a small contingency.

Nimrod

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he or any other Ministers in his Department have any plans to visit Woodford in October or November to observe the detailed procedures of the Nimrod return to works programme; and if he will make a statement on the progress of this work in terms of quality, accuracy and speed.

Mr. Butler: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him on 23 October last year at column 550; we still have no plans for a Nimrod return to works programme.

Royal Dockyards

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many companies which have expressed interest in the dockyard franchise are foreign-owned.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 18 March 1985 at column 412, which applies to all those firms who have expressed interest.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if his invitation to private companies to tender for the royal dockyard franchise will precede the passage of legislation on the dockyards.

Mr. Lee: On present plans the Ministry hopes to be in a position to invite companies to tender for the operation of the royal dockyards by the spring of next year. This will depend on progress in a number of areas, including the stage reached on the necessary legislation. There would be no question of the Ministry entering into any contractual commitments for the commercial management of the dockyards until Royal Assent has been obtained.

Royal Ordnance plc

Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether an external financing limit for 1985-86 and a financial objective have been set for Royal Ordnance plc.

Mr. Butler: An external financing limit of £50 million for 1985-86 has been set for Royal Ordnance plc. This will be met from the Reserve and will therefore not add to planned public expenditure. I have also agreed with the company a financial objective of a 5 per cent. real rate of return on average capital employed on a current cost basis.

Piracy

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's part in the suppression of piracy in the Gulf of Thailand.

Mr. Luce: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom is striving, with others, to help combat the scourge of piracy against boat refugees in the Gulf of Thailand. Since 1982 we have made annual contributions, totalling £335,000, to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees for use in the Thai Government's anti-piracy programme. Although the incidence of piracy remains distressingly high, there has been a welcome fall in the rate of attacks since the programme's inception.

Defence Situation Centre

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether there are any plans to alter the location or facilities of the defence situation centre.

Mr. Butler [pursuant to his reply, 25 July 1985]: It is not the practice to disclose details of operational matters of this sort.

Radiation Tests

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will list the Royal Navy ships involved in radiation tests between 1950 and 1956.

Mr. Butler [pursuant to his reply, 25 July 1985]: The Royal Navy ships involved in radiation tests between 1950 and 1956 were:

HMS Implacable;
HMS Rapid;
HMS Royalist;
HMS Sirius.

The tests consisted in the main of measuring the attenuation provided by parts of a ship to radiation from a source of radioactive cobalt. This allowed the protection afforded against both radiation flash and radioactive contamination to be determined.

In addition, a number of Royal Navy ships were involved in the British atmospheric nuclear weapon test programme, and some of these required decontamination, as I explained in my reply to the hon. Member yesterday. Of these, only HMS Diana was exposed to radioactive fallout in order to test radiation protection arrangements.

ENVIRONMENT

Families and Housing (Statistics)

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures for the numbers and proportions of (a) one-parent families and (b) two-parent families living in (i) private rented housing, (ii) local authority housing, (iii) owner-occupied housing with a mortgage, (iv) owner-occupied housing owned outright, (v) shared accommodation and (vi) housing association accommodation, respectively.

Sir George Young: The latest available information is for 1981 and 1982 and shows percentages of one-parent families and other families with dependent children in different tenure groups in Great Britain. The information was published in the report "General Household Survey 1982", a copy of which is in the Library.

Portsmouth City Council (Urban Aid)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much traditional urban aid Portsmouth city council has received in the years since 1978.

Sir George Young: For the years from 1977-78 to 1985-86 inclusive, Portsmouth city council's estimated project expenditure approved under the traditional urban programme totalled £2,057,157, of which 75 per cent. is being met by Government.

The yearly breakdown is:

1977-78	91,563
1978-79	99,657
1979-80	99,164
1980-81	166,817
1981-82	216,995
1982-83	323,701
1983-84	353,390
1984-85	445,270
1985-86	260,702

Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission

Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to convert the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission into a private trust fund along the lines of the National Trust or National Heritage Fund.

Mr. Macfarlane: No.

Local Authorities (Contracts)

Mr. Michie asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to introduce the legislation announced by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave) on 18 April, Official Report, column 520, affecting the awarding of contracts by local authorities.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Bedfordshire, South-West (Mr. Madel) on 10 July by my right hon. Friend at column 466.

Housing Renewal (Portsmouth)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if Portsmouth city council has approached his Department for any help from the urban housing renewal unit; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The head of the urban housing renewal unit, Peter Emms, wrote to the chief executive of Portsmouth city council on 24 June offering the unit's services. He has not yet received a reply.

The hon. Gentleman will be aware from my letter to him of 10 July of the great importance which the Government attach to the unit's work in helping local authorities tackle their rundown estates. The unit can offer an expert, independent and individual assessment of the problems, and suggest a package of measures for dealing with them. The unit can also help authorities to make full use of private and public sector funding opportunities. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will give the unit his full support.

Council Houses

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the number of council houses sold in the London borough of Wandsworth in each of the last five years and the number of council houses built in the borough during the same period.

Sir George Young: The number of council house sales completed by the London borough of Wandsworth in the years 1980-81 to 1983-84 appear in issues 62, 63, 67 and 71, respectively, of "Local Housing Statistics"; there were 1,780 sales in 1984-85. In the five years 1980-81 to 1984-85 inclusive, 1,706 council house dwellings were completed for the borough.

House Conversions

Sir John Page asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the planning and environmental issues arising over the conversion of smaller terraced and semi-detached houses into two flats.

Mr. Macfarlane: The division of houses into flats can often make a useful contribution to the supply of dwellings. Guidance on the planning issues raised — principally, traffic and parking — is contained in paragraph 9 and 10 of development control policy note 2, which should be read with paragraph 14 of annex 1 to Circular 22/80.

Council House Sales

Mr. Blair asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a table of public sector housing sales, analysed by sector, for each of the years 1979-80 to 1984-85, giving separate columns for (a) gross proceeds, (b) net proceeds, (c) estimated market value and (d) estimated replacement cost.

Sir George Young: The following tables give estimates of the market value, the selling price and the initial payments received for sales of council houses by English local authorities and new towns. Corresponding information for sales by housing associations is not held centrally by the Department.

£ million

	Market value	Selling price (market value less discount)	Initial payments received
Local authorities
1979-80	760	500	130
1980-81	1,090	670	200
1981-82	2,160	1,260	520
1982-83	3,070	1,770	1,020
1983-84	2,260	1,320	920
1984-85	1,980	1,110	800
New Towns
1979-80	n/a	18	4
1980-81	44	29	7
1981-82	56	39	16
1982-83	61	43	29
1983-84	60	50	44
1984-85	62	49	45

The Department does not collect information on the replacement costs of public sector dwellings which have been sold. The average construction tender cost of land for council houses in 1984-85 was £27,000.

Explosion (Abbeystead)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's Government will make available interim financial assistance to victims of the Abbeystead explosion while their independent claims are being pursued.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I share the hon. Member's concern about the plight of the victims of the Abbeystead disaster. They have my deepest sympathy. But as claims for compensation are now before the courts it would be wrong for the Government to take any action which could affect the natural outcome of these proceedings, however well-intentioned it might be. It is therefore not possible for special financial assistance to be made available in addition to what is provided to those in need through the normal channels of the Department of Health and Social Security.

Song Birds

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has made of the increase in the number of magpies and carrion crows in England and Wales, and the effect of this on the song bird population; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Estimates based upon the common bird census carried out each year by the British Trust for Ornithology indicate that the magpie population has increased by over one third in the past 20 years while the carrion crow population has about doubled in the same period.

A 1983 study of magpies found that eggs and young birds form an insignificant part of the species diet and this is likely to be true of the crow. There is no scientific evidence that predation by magpies and crows has a marked effect on song-bird population.

Rosehill Estate, Walsall

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will arrange in the near future to visit the Rosehill estate in Willenhall, Walsall, following the deputation seen by his officials on 18 July; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if it is intended for officials from his Department to visit the Rosehill estate, Willenhall, Walsall; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 24 July. The Department's regional housing controller will visit the Rosehill estate as soon as practicable. I hope to be able to do so myself at some future date.

Outside Toilets

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the number of dwellings in the west midlands region which have only outside toilets; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The latest available information relates to households present on census night in 1981 and is in table 7 of housing and households volume, a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many meetings his Department has held with local authorities to discuss resources in the current and next financial year for local authorities to improve dwellings which have only outside toilets.

Sir George Young: My Department meets all local authorities who wish to do so once a year to discuss resources for housing investment in the following financial year. There are also additional meetings as necessary on particular topics during the course of the year. I understand that no meetings have been held specifically on resources for the improvement of dwellings which have only outside toilets.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which Ministers in his Department have, in the past 12 months, visited dwellings where there are only outside toilets; when the visits occurred; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: My ministerial colleagues and I have visited many dwellings during the past 12 months in the course of our duties. Some of the areas we have visited have had substandard housing. I am not able to give figures for the number of dwellings with only outside WCs.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make available extra resources to local authorities in order that pre-war dwellings with only outside toilets are fully improved within the present and next financial year.

Sir George Young: Resources are allocated annually to each local authority for housing investment as a whole, following discussions with individual authorities of their housing investment programmes. It is for individual authorities to decide how best to apply those resources.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice his Department gives to local authorities regarding the improvement of their dwellings with only outside toilets; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The Department does not give any specific advice to local authorities on such matters. It is up to individual authorities to determine their own work and expenditure priorities, within the resources available to them.

Ministerial Duties

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the duties undertaken by each Minister in his Department during the course of the morning of Thursday 18 July.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Construction and my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport had engagements in Newcastle and Kent respectively.

I attended Cabinet and my other ministerial colleagues and I attended various meetings with departmental officials and others.

Public Sector Housing

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are taken by his officials to keep up-to-date records of circumstances where urgent improvement work is needed to public sector dwellings and local authorities state they do not have the resources to carry out the necessary work.

Sir George Young: My Department has recently asked all English housing authorities to complete a return, detailing the expenditure they consider is needed on their own housing, their estimated expenditure in 1985-86 on the works identified, and their proposed programme for 1986-87. The returns from this inquiry are currently being analysed.

Housing (Humberside)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new council houses were authorised and built in Grimsby borough each year since 1976-77; and how many were sold over the same period.

Sir George Young: The numbers of council house starts, completions and sales for individual local authority areas are published in "Local Housing Statistics". Figures of housing starts and completions are available for the period 1976 to 1984 and figures of sales are available for the period 1976 to the first half of the 1984-85 financial year. Copies of "Local Housing Statistics" are kept in the Library and the relevant issues are listed below:

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the contribution, in cash and as a percentage, made by central Government to local government expenditure in (a) Grimsby borough and (b) Humberside county in each year since 1977-78, together with any sums held back.

Sir George Young: The available information about the authorities' rate fund revenue expenditure is in the following tables because of changes in the rate support grant system, particularly in the allocation of the various elements to different tiers of authorities, the information relating to years earlier than 1981-82 does not provide meaningful comparisons.

	Government Grants (£ million)*	Grants as per cent. of Expenditure†	Holdback (£ million)

Hurn Airport

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those hon. Members who have made representations to him about developments at Hurn airport, Christchurch, Dorset.

Mr. Macfarlane: My right hon. Friend has received representations about developments at Hurn airport, Christchurch, Dorset, only from my hon. Friend.

Drinking Water

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment by when he expects the Government will have implemented EEC Directive 80/778 to limit pesticides, metals and nitrates in drinking water.

Mr. Gow: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South (Mr. Bright) on 23 July.

Water Information Letter (Publication)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reasons on 18 July his press office refused to give the news editor of New Scientist a copy of his Department's water information letter of 18 April.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: It is not the normal practice for my Department to make available to the press official communications addressed to the regional water authorities.

I am considering whether certain of such letters might with advantage be published in future but that will obviously turn on their content.

Superstores

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what priorities he uses in deciding planning appeals relating to superstores.

Mr. Macfarlane: In deciding all planning appeals my right hon. Friend takes into account all relevant considerations, including the policies set out in Circular 22/80 and Circular 14/85. I also refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill) on 5 July.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library the representations received as a result of the consultation carried out in October 1983 on policy relating to large new retail developments.

Mr. Macfarlane: No. It is for those who make representations to my Department to decide whether they wish to make such representations public; it would not be appropriate for me to do so.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail (a) the proportion of London superstore applications decided on appeal and (b) the average time which elapses between the decision to send a superstore or hypermarket application in Greater London to appeal and the date on which an appeal decision is based.

Mr. Macfarlane: There have been nine appeals in London relating to superstores since the beginning of 1983, of which six were allowed. We have no information on the number of applications determined by local planning authorities. The average time between the date of appeal and the date on which the appeal decisions were issued was fifteen months.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been achieved on his Department's pilot studies to collect data on retail sales and shops; whether a decision has been taken to extend the exercise to the rest of the United Kingdom; and what is the earliest date by which full coverage of Greater London's shopping centres can be achieved.

Mr. Macfarlane: My Department, in conjunction with the economic development committee for the distributive trades, is undertaking a pilot project to assess the costs and feasibility of a possible limited collection of retail statistics. The project is in its early stages and there is no commitment to any further research.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all current superstore applications where projected catchment areas overlap; and if he will make it his policy to have them considered in a single appeal or at linked appeals so that their cumulative impact can be considered.

Mr. Macfarlane: Information of this kind about applications to local planning authorities is not available. It is already the practice to hold joint inquiries into appeals which are clearly inter-related when it is feasible to do so.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why the cumulative impact of superstores did not feature in development control policy note 13.

Mr. Macfarlane: Development control policy note 13 gave general guidance on the effect of proposals for new retail development on existing centres.

Greater London Development Plan

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reconsider his decision not to consider the submitted Greater London development plan alterations which provide comprehensive shopping policies for Greater London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: My right hon. Friend is not prepared to reconsider his decision to invoke section 6 of the Local Government (Interim Provisions) Act 1984 and thereby defer consideration of proposed alterations to the Greater London development plan submitted by the Greater London council in September 1984.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the London Docklands development corporation keeps a register which indicates the number of homosexual men and women employed.

Sir George Young: No.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps the London Docklands development corporation has taken to provide guidance to developers on provisions for disabled people in public buildings as required by the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 and the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 as amended by the Disabled Persons Act 1981.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 25 July 1985]: All planning decision letters issued by LDDC are accompanied by guidance notes drawing the attention of applicants to the design guidance notes for disabled persons issued by the access committee for England.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) privately owned units and (b) publicly owned or housing association units on London Docklands development corporation-owned land have been designed for people with disabilities; and what is the London Docklands development corporation target number for such dwellings on London Docklands development corporation-owned land.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 25 July 1985]: Information on privately owned dwellings is not collected by the LDDC. Provision for the disabled is a matter for negotiation between the builder and the prospective purchaser. I shall write to the hon. Member about numbers of publicly owned dwellings.

LDDC does not have a target for the provision of housing for the disabled. The number built on publicly owned land is a matter for the housing authorities.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many women have obtained new jobs in the London Docklands development corporation area; what industries these women are employed in; and what percentage of total new jobs it represents.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 25 July 1985]: This information is not held by the Department or by LDDC.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps the London Docklands development corporation has taken to seek to ensure that new leisure facilities in the London Docklands development corporation areas are designed to give access for the disabled and elderly; and what steps are being taken to provide sports and leisure facilities that are suited to the specific requirements of the disabled and elderly.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 25 July 1985]: Where LDDC has provided all or part of the finance for a leisure facility, the corporation ensures that the builders take practical steps to give maximum accessibility to all sections of the community. For example, provision is made in the London docklands arena, which is under construction, for two disabled persons' lifts making access available to all of the building's amenities.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many construction jobs in the London Docklands development corporation area have been taken (a) by women and (b) by people from the black and ethnic minority communities.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 25 July 1985]: 130 full and part-time women workers are employed by construction firms based in the LDDC area. Information is not available for women employed in firms based outside but who are working within the LDDC area. Information on the second part of the question is not collected.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision the London Docklands development corporation has made of roads and pavements in its area for people with impaired mobility, wheelchair users, and pedestrians with aural and visual impairments.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 25 July 1985]: On roads built by the LDDC, provision has been made for dropped kerbs and ramps to ease mobility.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the London Docklands development corporation keeps a register which indicates the number of members of black and other ethnic minority communities employed.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 25 July 1985]: No.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 29 April, Official Report, columns 31-32, if he will list the individual development initiatives for the royal docks being discussed by the London Docklands development corporation.

Sir George Young [pursuant to his reply, 25 July 1985]: The premature provision of information concerning development initiatives in the preliminary stages would breach commercial confidentiality and could prejudice present and future negotiations by the LDDC. However, one development initiative that has been publicised is a sports and exhibition complex on the north side of the Royal Victoria dock. Feasibility studies put forward by the developers, Intersport, are being considered by the corporation.

Royal Parks

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) to which firm his Department awarded the royal parks consultancy; what progress has been made; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much his Department is spending on the royal parks consultancy; what is the purpose of the consultancy study; when the report will be presented to his Department.

Mr. Macfarlane: Inbucon Management Consultants Ltd., in association with Land Use Consultants, has been asked to advise my Department on standards of maintenance in the royal parks; the resource implications of those standards and alternative options for getting the work done. At this stage, the commission is limited to a feasibility study based on Regent's park. The report on the feasibility study is expected to be received in September. For reasons of commercial confidentially my right hon. Friend does not reveal information about the cost of consultancies.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail the staff employed in each of the royal parks by category in each of the past five years.

Mr. Macfarlane: The industrial staff numbers in each park by category are given in the following table:

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many apprentices have been employed in the royal parks in each of the past five years.

Mr. Macfarlane: The number of apprentices employed in the Royal Parks on 1 April in each of the past five years is as follows:

	Number
1981	52
1982	50
1983	47
1984	39
1985	30

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many handicapped workers are employed in each of the royal parks.

Mr. Macfarlane: Fourteen handicapped workers are employed in the Royal Parks, four in central parks, four in Richmond park, four in Greenwich park and two at Hampton Court gardens.

Palace of Westminster

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what chemicals are being used by the company cleaning the stonework of the Palace of Westminster; what is the total cost of the contract; and if there has been any revision of the cost since the work commenced.

Sir George Young: The cleaning is done entirely by water washing and grit jetting. No chemicals have been specified for use, or are known to have been used, by any of the contractors involved in this work. The total estimated cost of the first five stages (up to and including the Terrace) is £5,219,000. The original estimate for restoring all the Palace stonework, made in 1981 before work started, was £5·5 million. This estimate was revised in the light of the experience gained in the initial phases to between £7 million and £9 million at mid-1983 prices.

Field Heath Nurseries

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects that the re-opened inquiry concerning the appeal by Milton Hutchings Limited and Costain Homes against the decision of the London borough of Hillingdon not to grant planning permission for development on Field Heath nurseries will now take place.

Mr. Macfarlane: The date of 3 September has been proposed for the re-opened inquiry.

Coal Production (Rateable Values)

Mr. Thornton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to take any special measures to compensate those local authorities in England whose rate income may be affected by the low levels of coal production during the miners' strike.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The rateable value of National Coal Board mine properties is governed by a formula which depends on coal production in previous years. Local authorities in some mining areas will see a sharp reduction in NCB rateable values in 1986-87 as a consequence of the fall in production in 1984-85.

I have considered carefully whether any special measures to offset this reduction are warranted. In most cases, NCB properties represent only a small fraction of the rateable value in the area and I have concluded that there should be no special treatment. The normal equalizing effect of the block grant system will in 1987-88 compensate such authorities for the fall in rateable values. By making an announcement this early, I am giving authorities affected plenty of advance notice.

Avon

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the revised structure plan for the county of Avon.

Mr. Macfarlane: My right hon. Friend has now completed his consideration of the objections to the Avon county structure plan and to his proposed modifications published last July. He has today approved the plan subject to modifications. The structure plan will be the framework for local plans and for the control of development in the county. It will become operative on 16 August 1985.

Coalfield Communities Campaign

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange for an exhibition relating to the coalfield communities campaign to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No, but my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State would be pleased to meet the coalfield communities campaign to discuss environmental issues in coalfield areas if it wishes to do so.

Olympic Games

Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will now propose to the international olympic committee the choice of the city of Birmingham as the venue for the 1992 olympic games.

Mr. Macfarlane: No. Bids for staging the olympic games are made by national olympic committees, not by Government.

Broad Street Station

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of Monday 8 July, Official Report column 345, whether the advice given in 1981 was to the effect that Broad street station should be listed; and if he will now place a copy of that advice in the Library.

Mr. Macfarlane: Unlike the advice recently given to my right hon. Friend by the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission, the advice offered by officials in the Department to the Secretary of State in 1981 remains, as is usual, confidential.

Green Belt

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he intends to take to protect the green belt from development in the light of the sale by the Department of Transport of an option to develop 90 acres of green belt land known as Brickets Wood at the M1/M25 interchange.

Mr. Macfarlane: The option to be sold by the Department of Transport will simply permit the option purchaser to apply to the local planning authority for permission to develop the site. If the authority were minded to give permission for what it regarded as a substantial departure from the approved development plan, it would not be able to do so without prior reference to my right hon. Friend.

Planning

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what response has been made by the Association of London Authorities to the letter sent by his Department, dated 19 May, regarding the need for statutory provision of some suitable kind to achieve co-ordination and coherence between boroughs in planning policies.

Mr. Macfarlane: A letter was sent to the Association of London Authorities on 9 May, and a reply received on 30 May. The association remained of the view that an elected, statutory London-wide strategic planning body was needed.

The Local Government Act makes provision for a joint committee of London boroughs to consider and give advice on matters of common interest relating to planning.

Buckinghamshire

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his decision on the Buckinghamshire structure plan, proposed alterations number 1, 1981.

Mr. Macfarlane: The Secretary of State has today sent to Buckinghamshire county council the report of the panel that conducted an examination in public on the proposed alterations, together with details of my proposed modifications and the reasons for them. These will be published and the statutory six weeks period allowed for objections to the proposed modifications. Because of the summer holiday period, however, any objections received up to 1 October will be considered. All objections made before then will be carefully considered before he issues his final decision on the alterations.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish a report describing the level of activity in enterprise zones; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My Department has today published an information report covering the 23 enterprise zones in Great Britain in autumn 1984. A separate report for Northern Ireland will be published later in the year. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House of Commons.

The report shows that enterprise zones are a success. They restore economic activity to areas that have suffered from decline and decay. In the autumn of 1984, over 2,000 businesses with a total of more than 48,000 jobs were located in the zones in Great Britain. The number of jobs had increased by about 45 per cent. in first round zones since designation in 1981 (excluding Corby, where detailed records of employment at designation are not available) and by 77 per cent. in second round zones since designation (excluding Milford Haven which was not designated until April 1984).

Of course, not all the firms in the zones are new ones: some have moved from elsewhere. Nevertheless, we expect increased economic activity in the zones to benefit the surrounding area generally, generating further activity.

The report provides basic information about zone activity and does not purport to be a comprehensive monitoring exercise. We intend to update the evaluation provided by the consultants, who monitored the first round zones for the initial three years by commissioning a further survey in two to three years' time.

Tower Hamlets

Mr. Shore asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what, in constant prices, was the payment to the borough of Tower Hamlets through the housing investment programme in 1985-86 and in each preceding year to 1978-79.

Sir George Young: The housing investment programme allocations made to the London borough of Tower Hamlets at constant 1983-84 prices in each of the years from 1978-79 to 1985-86 are as follows:

	£ million
1978-79	24·604
1979-80	19·891
1980-81	15·469
1981-82	5·944
1982-83	11·024
1983-84	12·000
1984-85	11·781
1985-86	10·612

Since 1981-82 local authorities have been able to add to their spending power through the prescribed proportion of any capital receipts which they generate.

Mr. Shore asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what, in constant prices, was the value of the rate support grant payment to the London borough of Tower Hamlets in 1985-86 and for each preceding year to 1978-79; and what is the proposed payment of 1986-87.

Sir George Young: The information requested is as follows:

	£ million
1978-79	55·897
1979-80	53·958
1980-81	49·649
1981-82	44·045
1982-83	38·282
1983-84	33·897
1984-85	28·616
1985-86	27·225

All the figures have been revalued to 1985-86 constant prices using the GDP deflator. Figures for 1978-79 to 1980-81 contain needs and domestic elements; the council did not qualify for resources element.

The figures for 1981-82 to 1985-86 are after holdback, as appropriate. Those for 1981-82 and 1982-83 are final entitlements; those for 1983-84 to 1985-86 are latest entitlements. The figure for 1981-82 includes grant paid to the Council in respect of the GLC and the Metropolitan police; that for 1982-83 includes grant in respect of the Metropolitan police. Receipts under the London rate equalisation scheme are included for all years. Tower Hamlets' grant entitlement for 1986-87 will depend upon a number of decisions yet to be taken, including the council's budget for that year.

Hackney

Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is now in a position to take a decision on the appeal (APP/U356-C-84-2174-2180) against an enforcement notice imposed by Hackney council in relation to a garage site adjacent to 7 Clapton Square, Hackney E.5.

Sir George Young: My right hon. Friend regrets that there has been some delay in dealing with this appeal. However, an inspection of the site by the planning inspector appointed to decide the appeal will take place shortly; and the inspector's decision will be issued as soon as possible after the inspection.

Local Government Reform

Dr. Hampson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made in setting up residuary bodies in London and the metropolitan counties.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Enfield, Southgate (Mr. Portillo) on 5 June about the appointment of Sir Godfrey Taylor as chairman of the London residuary body. I am pleased to be able to announce that the following have accepted my right hon. Friend's invitation to serve as chairmen of the residuary bodies in the metropolitan counties, when they are established by order under the Local Government Act 1985.

Greater Manchester Residuary Body—
Mr. J. P. B. Hadfield, JP, formerly Chairman and Managing Director of Bass North West Limited.

Merseyside Residuary Body—
Mr. L. F. Pocock, CBE, formerly Deputy Group Comptroller Royal Insurance Group.

Tyne and Wear Residuary Body—
Mr. A. S. Robertson, formerly Chief Executive, Northumbrian Water Authority.
West Midlands Residuary Body—
Dr. M. D. Skillicorn, Corporate Director, Public Affairs, of the GKN Group.
West Yorkshire Residuary Body—
Mr. T. McDonald, OBE, a senior partner in Armitage and Norton, Chartered Accountants.

Sir Godfrey Taylor's appointment will run for five years from the date of the establishment of the London residuary body, and those of the other chairmen until 1 April 1988.

Announcements about other appointments to the residuary bodies, and the dates on which they are to be set up, will be made shortly.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now list the new authorities in Greater London with the power to issue precepts under section 67 of the Local Government Act 1985.

Sir George Young: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Hampshire

Mr. Mates asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce the date for publication of the report of the examination in public into the proposed alterations to the north-east Hampshire structure plan.

Mr. Macfarlane: I am publishing the report today, together with my proposed modifications to the alterations and a statement of the reasons for them.

Basildon

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to the number of dwellings sold by Basildon district council for each of the last four years and the proportion this represented of the council's total housing stock in each year;

(2) what information he has as to the number of dwellings sold by Basildon Development Corporation for each of the last four years and the proportion this represented of the total housing stock of the corporation in each year.

Sir George Young: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mr. Proctor) on Wednesday 15 May 1985 at columns 131-32.

I shall write to my hon. Friend with further information shortly.

Greater London (Sporting Schemes)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional funds he proposes to make available for sporting schemes in the Greater London area.

Mr. Macfarlane [pursuant to his reply, 25 July 1985]: It will be for London boroughs to assume full responsibility for the provision of sport and recreation in London on 1 April 1986. As already indicated, some additional central funding will be made available, through the Sports Council, for projects, schemes and facilities of wider than local significance. I am at present considering the Sports Council's case for such additional funding and will make an announcement in due course.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in how many planning appeals during the last 12 months he has not accepted the inspector's recommendations; how many of these involved proposals for (a) residential development, and (b) more than 300 residential units.

Mr. Macfarlane [pursuant to his reply, 25 July 1985]: In 1984, 16 appeals were decided contrary to the inspector's recommendations. I shall write to my hon. Friend with the further information which he has requested.

Local Government Inquiry

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of his announcement of 6 February, Official Report, column 957, of an inquiry into the practices and procedures in local government, he will prepare and place in the Library a paper outlining the current rights, responsibilities and duties of elected members as referred to in paragraph (a) of the terms of reference of the inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin [pursuant to his reply, 18 March 1985, c. 376]: I have today placed in the Library copies of a joint submission on political organisation in local government made by my Department, The Scottish Office and the Welsh Office to the Widdicombe inquiry. We propose to submit shortly two further papers on the roles of members and officers in local government and on local authorities' use of their discretionary spending powers. These, too, will be placed in the Library in due course.

Rate Limitation

Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the level of spending below which local authorities will be exempt from selective rate limitation for 1986-87.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin [pursuant to his reply, 17 June 1985, c. 22]: I have now announced the list of the 12 authorities designated for selective rate limitation in 1986-87 and the expenditure levels I have set for them.

It is open to these authorities to seek a redetermination of their expenditure level if they consider the amounts determined are inadequate. I will pay particular attention to the question of funding for voluntary bodies.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the first meeting of the British-Chinese joint liaison group's discussions on the future of Hong Kong.

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the minutes of the first meeting of the joint liaison group and indicate by what means he proposes to keep the House and the Hong Kong people informed of progress

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to make a statement on the progress of the joint liaison group talks on Hong Kong; and when the next meeting of the group will be.

Mr. Luce: The following communiqué was issued on 25 July, on the conclusion of the first meeting of the Sino-British Joint Liaison Group:

Begins

The Sino-British Joint Liaison Group held its first meeting in London from 22 to 25 July 1985.—

The atmosphere was friendly and co-operative.

The two sides discussed and established working procedures for the Group.

In accordance with the provision of paragraph 4 of Annex II to the Sino-British Joint Declaration, the Group held a wide-ranging discussion on Hong Kong's external economic relations. Among other things they discussed the question of how Hong Kong should continue, as a Special Administrative Region, its participation in the GATT, Multifibre Arrangements, and other international arrangements. The Group exchanged ideas on the working procedures for examining the continued application of international rights and obligations to Hong Kong.

The Group attached great importance to the role of the GATT and MFA in Hong Kong's economic development, particularly in its external trade activities. Both sides expressed their wishth to cooperate closely to ensure the maintenance of Hong Kong's participation in the above international arrangements. The Group will continue its work on these subjects.

The Group decided that the next meeting would take place in Beijing from 26 to 29 November 1985.

Ends

The House and the people of Hong Kong will be kept as fully informed about progress made in the group as is possible in view of the stipulation in annex II, paragraph 10 of the joint declaration that the proceedings of the group shall remain confidential unless otherwise agreed between the two sides. There will be an annual report to the House on Hong Kong.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether experts and supporting staff of the joint liaison group, and members and supporting staff of the Land Commission, established under the Sino-British joint declaration on the question of Hong Kong, will be accorded privileges and immunities in the same way as members of the joint liaison group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Arrangements to provide privileges and immunities for members of the joint liaison group, including the enactment of legislation in the United Kingdom and in Hong Kong, were made before the Sino-British joint declaration was ratified. A subsequent exchange of letters between the British chargé d'affaires and a Chinese Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs took place in Peking on 26 July. In accordance with the terms of this exchange, appropriate privileges and immunities will be granted to experts and supporting staff of the joint liaison group at meetings in Peking, London and Hong Kong. In London and Peking such experts and supporting staff will be appointed temporarily as members of their respective Embassies. Appropriate privileges and immunities will also be granted to members and supporting staff of the Land Commission which has been established in Hong Kong.

I am arranging for a copy of this exhange of letters to be laid in the Library of the House.

Property (Spain)

Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice is available from his Department to people seeking to purchase property and businesses in Spain.

Mr. Renton: General information on settling in Spain may be obtained from the consular department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office or our missions in Spain. British citizens seeking to purchase property and or businesses in Spain are advised to consult a lawyer.

South Africa

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions during the last year the Government have raised at the United Nations the subject of human rights in South Africa.

Mr. Luce: South Africa's human rights record is a regular item on the agenda of a number of United Nations bodies including the General Assembly, the Economic and Social Council and the Commission on Human Rights. We participate fully in such discussions.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise with the French Government their unilateral decision to withdraw ambassadorial recognition from South Africa and to ban French investment there, in the light of the unanimous agreement on European Economic Community policy on South Africa which he reported to the House on 24 July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The decisions announced by the French Government were matters for their own judgment. For our part, we believe that we should maintain a positive approach which will help to resolve the serious problems of South Africa. This was the purpose of the joint statement agreed by all the Foreign Ministers of the Ten on 22 July.

Youth Councils

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has information on the participation of youth sections of political parties in the appropriate youth council or other similar body in each of the member states of the Council of Europe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The information is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member.

North Atlantic Assembly

Mr. Hill asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what appointments have been made to the United Kingdom's delegation to the North Atlantic Assembly.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: My hon. Friend the Member for Weston-super-Mare (Mr. Wiggin) has replaced my hon. Friend the Member for Aldershot (Mr. Critchley.). My hon. Friend the Member for Winchester (Mr. Browne) becomes an alternate member of the delegation.

South Africa (Emergency Powers)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards South Africa following the introduction of emergency laws in that country.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. and learned Friend gave on 24 July to the hon. Member for Wootwich (Mr. Cartwright) at column 1030.

Non-Proliferation Treaty

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Government of Luxembourg about the subsequent re-export of depleted uranium supplied by British Nuclear Fuels Limited to International Metals SA in 1984 and the implication of the manner in which this was carried out for the operation of the non-proliferation treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Meriomydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 25 July. The Luxembourg Government have been made aware of our views on this matter.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, at the non-proliferation treaty meeting in August, he will propose free trade in nuclear materials between any country that is a member of the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Luce: No. Our export policy with regard to nuclear materials remains as set out by the then Foreign Secretary, the right hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Callaghan) on 31 March 1976. Of course, membership by the recipient country of the non-proliferation treaty is a positive factor in our consideration of individual cases.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to breaches of the non-proliferation treaty recorded by the monitoring organisations regarding the supply of nuclear material to other states without the required notification in each of the last five years and as to the states involved and the materials involved in each case.

Mr. Luce: The Director-General of the International Atomic Energy Agency has informed the agency board of governors that in 1984, as in previous years, the secretariat, in carrying out the safeguards obligations of the agency, did not detect any anomaly which would indicate the diversion of a significant amount of nuclear material — or the misuse of facilities or equipment subject to safeguards under certain agreements — for the manufacture of any nuclear weapon, or for any other military purpose, or for the manufacture of any other nuclear explosive device, or for purposes unknown. Details of the agency safeguards activities within particular states remain confidential to the agency secretariat and the state concerned.

Entry Clearance Officers

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many entry clearance officers were in post at each post in the Indian sub-continent on 1 April.

Mr. Renton: The numbers of entry clearance officers in each post on 1 April were as follows:

	Number
New Delhi	4
Bombay	6
Calcutta	1
Islamabad	14
Karachi	2
Dhaka	16

Baltic States

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the reply of 5 July, Official Report, column 273, what contracts Her Majesty's Government maintain with any of the Baltic states which do not imply de jure recognition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: There have on occasions been limited contacts between members of Her Majesty's embassy and officials of the Baltic republics related to specific events when these were in our interests. A case in point was over the organisation of the British element in a trade exhibition in Riga in 1974.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the minimum yield of explosion carried out for the purposes of underground nuclear tests in the Soviet Union which can be detected using existing verification equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Current capabilities for detecting nuclear explosions are addressed in the working paper on "Seismic Monitoring for a Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban" which the United Kingdom tabled earlier this month at the Geneva conference on disarmament. A copy of this paper is in the Library.

Prince Masbour

Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will request that the Saudi Arabian Government offer no refuge, sanctuary or comfort to Royal Prince Masbour Bin Saud Abdul Aziz while he is in breach of his bail conditions in respect of drug charges.

Mr. Luce: We understand from the latest press reports that Prince Masbour is still in Britain. Any breach of bail conditions would, of course, be a matter for the courts.

Italian Terrorists

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the Italian Government about the presence in the United Kingdom of Italian terrorists.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. and learned Friend has not been approached by the Italian Government.

European Assembly

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his statement on 24 July, if he will provide details of the more positive role envisaged by her Majesty's Government for the European Assembly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to the suggestions made by my hon. Friend the Minister of State in the ad hoc committee for institutional affairs. These are to be found on page 30 in the committee's report which was deposited in the Library of the House on 22 April.

EC Directives

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his statement on 24 July, if he will explain whether it remains the intention of Her Majesty's Government to seek to preserve the principle of unanimity in European Economic Community directives relating to industry and commerce made under article 100; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Our attitude to any specific proposals will depend on whether they would in fact help achieve the reforms which are necessary in the way the Community works, including the completion of the common market.

EC Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his statement on 24 July, if he will provide details of the Treaty of European Co-operation which is to be discussed at the intergovernmental conference.

Mr. Luce: The Milan European Council asked for work to be set in hand on a draft treaty on foreign policy and security in accordance with Franco-German and United Kingdom proposals. The United Kingdom draft was deposited in the House on 2 July.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Franco-German proposals on a draft treaty of European Union has yet been placed on the agenda for the intergovernmental conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The Milan European Council asked that proposals be submitted for a draft treaty on foreign policy and security for discussion by heads of state and Government at the Luxembourg European Council. The Ministers for Foreign Affairs have subsequently instructed the Political Committee to draw up by 15 October the text of a draft treaty on the basis of the United Kingdom and Franco-German drafts. This draft will then be considered by the Ministers for Foreign Affairs meeting for this purpose within the intergovernmental conference.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is his intention to submit any proposals to be placed on the agenda for the intergovernmental conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: We have already put forward a number of practical proposals. We are now waiting for concrete proposals from our partners as a basis for discussion at the conference. We will then consider whether to put forward any further ideas ourselves.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek clarification from the European Economic Community Commission on whether the intergovernmental conference called under article 236 of the treaty of Rome will be restricted to the consideration of amendments to the treaty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The conference has been called to determine by common accord what amendments should be made to the EC treaty. Discussion will also cover issues which do not require treaty amendment, such as the United Kingdom's own proposals for practical improvements.

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is the policy of Her Majesty's Government that any proposals made by the intergovernmental conference called under article 236 of the treaty of Rome will be considered by Parliament before the meeting of the European Council in December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The House will have ample opportunity to debate these issues. My hon. Friend will recall that the report of the Dooge committee was deposited in the House before it was discussed at the Milan European Council.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Board and Lodging Allowances

Mr. Frank Field asked the Attorney-General what special arrangements have been made to notify young people under the age of 25 years who have appealed against a supplementary benefit board and lodging decision about the date of the appeal hearing; what measures have been taken to ensure that appellants receive all appropriate papers; and what is the average time between lodging an appeal and the subsequent hearing by a social security appeal tribunal.

Mr. Whitney: I have been asked to reply.
I will write to the hon. Member.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Trustee Savings Bank

Mr. Wilson asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will list the dates when he and the Lord Advocate, respectively, met the chairman or the trustees of the Trustee Savings bank of Scotland to discuss matters directly or indirectly connected with the Government's legislation to float the trustee savings banks.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: No.

Mr. Wilson asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if Scottish Law Officers or their officials participated in or contributed to the working groups or committees of the Trustee Savings bank central board when that body was considering questions inherent in the flotation of the trustee savings banks.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: No.

Unruly Certificates

Mr. Kennedy asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland if he will detail the types of behaviour and categories of offence in respect of which procurators fiscal seek the issue of unruly certificates.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: The application for unruly certificates by procurators fiscal is governed by section 297 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1975 and is not dependent on specific types of behaviour or categories of offence as such, but on whether a child is of so unruly a character that he cannot safely be committed to a place of safety or that he is of so depraved a character that he is not a fit person to be so detained. Prior to making an application for an unruly certificate, procurators fiscal will consult officials of the local authority on whether there is secure accommodation available as an alternative to recommending an unruly certificate, and the result of such consultation will be made known to the sheriff if the procurator fiscal proceeds with his application.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Newham (Trial Costs)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Attorney-General what was the total cost to public funds of bringing prosecutions against those involved in the recent Newham seven trial.

The Attorney-General: This case is not fully concluded and no application has yet been made in respect of prosecution costs. If an order is made for payment of the prosecution costs from central funds, they will be subject to taxation by the appropriate officer of the Crown Court. All these defendants are legally aided and the defence costs will be the subject of determination by an officer of the Crown court.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Attorney-General what was the cost of bringing prosecutions in the Newham eight trial.

The Attorney-General: The costs of the prosecution in this case were awarded from central funds. The costs are paid as taxed into court. It is not the practice to disclose the sums involved in individual cases.

Social Security Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Barnett asked the Attorney-General whether it is his policy to appoint suitably qualified men and women under the age of 35 years to chairmanships of social security appeal tribunals.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor does not generally appoint barristers or solicitors who have the requisite number of years' professional standing to tribunal posts if they are under the age of 35.

Crown Courts

Mr. Evennett asked the Attorney-General how many new Crown courts have been opened since 1983.

The Attorney-General: Five new Crown court buildings have been brought into use since 1 January 1983 at Southwark, Maidstone, Liverpool, Swindon and Salisbury, containing a total of 47 Crown court courtrooms.

Finer Committee Report

Ms. Harman asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the latest position as regards the implementation by his Department of the recommendations which affect its responsibilities of the report of the Finer committee on one-parent families.

The Attorney-General: There are no recommendations in the report of the Finer committee on one-parent families which affect the responsibilities of my Department.

Social Security Appeals

Mr. Frank Field asked the Attorney-General how many outstanding social security appeals to social security commissioners were held in the office of the commissioners awaiting hearing at December 1983, December 1984 and currently, broken down between (a) applications seeking leave to appeal, (b) successful applications awaiting receipt of appeal and (c) appeals.

The Attorney-General: The number of pending appeals and applications to the social security commissioners in (i) April 1984 (when this information was first collected), (ii) December 1984 and (iii) currently, is respectively:

	April 1984	December 1984	Currently
(a) applications seeking leave to appeal	125	151	302
(b) successful applications awaiting receipt of the appeal papers	226	253	231
(c) appeals	698	1,019	1,207

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give, for judgments delivered by the European Court of Human Rights against signatory nations of the European convention on human rights, the date of judgment, the name of the country affected, the articles in question, and brief details of the nature of the judgment.

Mr. Renton [pursuant to his reply, 11 July 1985, c. 514]: I have been asked to reply.

Parades

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the occasions on which he and his predecessors in office have agreed to the re-routing or banning of parades, loyalist and otherwise; and if he will list his powers in the matter.

Mr. Scott: Under the Public Order (Northern Ireland) Order 1981, the routing of public processions is a matter for the police. As far as can be ascertained from available records, the Secretary of State's powers under the 1981 order, and the legislation that preceded it, to prohibit the holding of public processions have been exercised on the following occasions:

Date	Location of Proposed Procession

Catering Training

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the relationship between the Northern Ireland catering industry training board and the Council for Education Recruitment and Training in the Republic of Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: There is no formal relationship between these organisations. However, informal meetings are held from time to time between their representatives for the exchange of information, knowledge and ideas about training in the hotel and catering industry.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of the involvement of the Northern Ireland catering industry training board in the youth training programme since this scheme was instituted; and what are the number of places targeted, those filled and the number who completed the course.

Dr. Boyson: The catering industry training board has been involved in the youth training programme by supporting employers and further education colleges in the provision of off-the-job training, education and work experience for young people.

In 1983-84, of the 85 targeted places 46 were filled. Ten young people completed their year's course, and 24 obtained catering industry jobs before completion.

In 1984-85, of the 92 targeted places 91 were filled. Fifty-three young people are still following their year's course, and 28 have already obtained catering industry jobs.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining the involvement of the hotel and catering industry in the youth training programme.

Dr. Boyson: The hotel and catering industry makes a valuable contribution to the training of both 16 and 17-year-olds in Northern Ireland through its participation in the youth training programme which offers training for young people in the two years following the minimum school leaving age. Full-time training for 16-year-olds is delivered through partnerships of two or more providers, one of whom must be an employer, and hotel and catering firms participate in these full-time training partnerships. For 17-year-olds, the hotel and catering industry is involved with the provision of training in the programme through the YTP workscheme and the skill training scheme.

Information relating to numbers of employers in the hotel and catering industry involved in the youth training programme cannot be extracted except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of the opportunities for hotel and catering studies at colleges of further education in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: I understand that the courses in hotel and catering studies set out in the attached schedule will be available in further education colleges in Northern Ireland in the academic year 1985-86.

Tourism

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the average amount of capital employed per job in the tourist industry in Northern Ireland compared with the economy as a whole.

Dr. Boyson: The information is not available.

Teaching Posts

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of all Northern Ireland schools which have been allocated discretionary teaching posts during the school year 1985-86, including the number of such posts in each school.

Mr. Scott: As the details are voluminous, I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultation takes place between education and library boards and the Department of Education regarding the allocation of discretionary teaching posts in each board area.

Mr. Scott: The Department of Education for Northern Ireland has full discussions with officers of each education and library board about the allocation of teaching posts to all controlled schools under its management.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of schools which have had falling enrolments since 1984-85 and have been allocated discretionary posts in 1985-86.

Mr. Scott: This information cannot be supplied because figures for school enrolments in 1985-86 are not yet available.

Animals (Slaughter)

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total number of animals slaughtered in Northern Ireland during the months of April, May and June; and what were the figures for the same period in 1984.

Dr. Boyson: The information is as follows:

	1984	1985
Cattle
April	44,080	48,132
May	31,788	39,318

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the amount of milk produced in the first three months of the 1985 quota year; what is the comparison with 1983 levels for the same period; and what percentage above or below quota production is at present.

Dr. Boyson: The information is as follows:

Schools (Pupil Choice)

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils were awarded the school of their first choice in the Southern education and library board area, in all grades of the transfer procedure; and how many have had to accept an alternative.

Mr. Scott: In the Southern education and library board area 3,035—94·2 per cent.—pupils from selective areas obtained the school of their first preference; 2,367—99 per cent.—from non-selective areas obtained the school of their first preference.

Some 211 pupils were unsuccessful in obtaining the school of their first preference.

A and M Grades

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the percentage of A and M grades awarded in (a) controlled primary schools and (b) maintained primary schools in the Southern education and library board area.

Mr. Scott: The number of A and M grades awarded to pupils in controlled primary schools, maintained primary schools and preparatory departments, expressed as a percentage of the total number of A and M grades awarded in the Southern education and library board area is as follows:

	A per cent.	M per cent.
Controlled	21·7	25·8
Maintained	76·7	73·7
Preparatory Departments	1·6	0·5

Skimmed Milk Powder

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what amount of skimmed milk powder is used by the intensive sector of agriculture in Northern Ireland in animal feeds.

[Source: Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce].

Beef

Mr. James Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of beef produced in Northern Ireland during 1984 was exported (a) to countries within the European Economic Community and (b) to countries outside the Community.

Dr. Boyson: The quantity of beef exported during 1984 was equivalent to 68 per cent. of the tonnage of beef slaughtered in 1984; 53 per cent. went to Great Britain, 31 per cent. to other European Community countries and 16 per cent. directly to third countries.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated waiting list of patients for Craigavon area hospital and Daisy Hill general hospital in Newry.

Processions

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will call for a report from the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary as to the cost of policing the Loyalist parades on 12 and 13 July in Portadown in each of the last five years including 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Chief Constable regularly informs my right hon. Friend and me of law enforcement issues, including the conduct of parades and particular events and the police resources involved. So far as the policing of the Portadown parades is concerned, the estimated cost for 12 and 13 July 1984 was £34,150, and for 1985 it was £341,000. Similar information is not available for 1981-83.

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Royal Ulster Constabulary, Army and Ulster Defence Regiment personnel, respectively, were deployed in Portadown in connection with Loyalist parades on 12 and 13 July in each of the last five years including 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: It would not be appropriate for me to give details of the deployment of members of the security forces at particular locations; these are operational matters decided by Royal Ulster Constabulary and Army commanders.

Mr. Scott: Since the routeing of marches and parades is a matter for the Chief Constable's operational judgment, the Northern Ireland Office does not keep a comprehensive record of all those who have expressed views to me or my colleagues on these matters. Representatives of the Social Democratic and Labour party gave my right hon. Friend and me their views on the Portadown marches which were to take place on 7, 12 and 13 July, but there were no representations during this period from the Irish Government, the Workers party or from Sinn Fein.

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many marches in the Province have been re-routed annually during the past 5 years.

Mr. Scott: The routes of a large number of processions are altered each year after consultations between the organisers and the police. Only a very small proportion give rise to any difficulty or public disorder. Police records are not maintained in a way which would allow the detailed information requested to be obtained at other than disproportionate cost.

Notes:

1. The offence classifications are based on those used by the Crown and Peace Office in their annual return.
2. The tables relate to persons convicted at the Belfast Crown court. This covers all scheduled offences tried on indictment.
3. Some jury trials are included in cases where the Attorney-General certified out of the scheduled mode of trial, that is, non-terrorist serious offences.
4. Where a person has been convicted of more than one offence only the most serious or that which received the longest sentence is recorded in the statistics.

Plastic Bullets

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many plastic bullets have been fired in Northern Ireland since the beginning of the current year and in what circumstanes; in what location the bullets were fired; and how many, if any, persons were injured as a result of the use of plastic bullets.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1985]: Between 1 January and 13 July, 116 plastic baton rounds were fired in Northern Ireland. Police records indicate that four people were allegedly injured by plastic baton rounds during that period.

I am writing to the hon. Member with the information he has requested about the circumstances and places in which the baton rounds were fired. A copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the number so far in the current year concerning the operation of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 (a) what was the yearly total of arrests made under the Act, (b) how many persons arrested under the Act were detained for the following periods: (i) up to 12 hours, (ii) 12 to 24 hours, (iii) 24 to 36 hours, (iv) 36 to 48 hours, (v) 48 to 60 hours and (vi) 60 to 72 hours, indicating those numbers (1) not ultimately charged under the Act and released, (2) those charged under the Act and (3) those charged with an offence but not under the Acts indicating which offences and (4) those charged under the Act but not initially detained under the Act;

(2) if he will state the current number of people who were detained so far in the current year under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 and charged with scheduled offences under the Act and other Acts, separately; and with which offences they have been charged.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1985]: In the first six months of this year there were 576 arrests by the Royal Ulster Constabulary and 41 by members of the armed forces under the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978. Some of those arrested by members of the armed forces would be recorded in the Royal Ulster Constabulary figures if they were subsequently handed over to the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Of those arrests carried out by the Royal Ulster Constabulary, in 492 of the cases the persons concerned were released without charge; in two cases persons were subsequently charged with offences under the Act only; and in 82 other cases persons were charged with offences under other legislation. 72 of the cases involved persons charged with scheduled offences, though details of the offences are not readily available. No one was charged with an offence under the Act after arrest under other provisions.

Information on the length of time individuals were held under the Act could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many arrests were made for disorderly or riotous behaviour at the venue of each Orange demonstration on (a) 12 July 1984 and (b) 12 July 1985 during the period from the start of the procession to the departure of those taking part from the point where the procession terminated; and in each case how many of those arrested were taking part in the demonstration.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1985]: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Processions

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of policing the Orange procession through the Gortalowry estate in Cookstown on 12 July; what was the cost in 1984, and how many incidents there were which required police action on either occasion.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1985]: No information is available for 1984. Precise details of the cost of policing the Orange Order parades in Cookstown on 12 July 1985 could be provided only at disproportionate cost, but an estimate shows it to have been in the region of £1,130. It is not possible to say how many incidents required police action.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the processions which took place in Northern Ireland between 1 March 1985 and 30 April 1985 in respect of which the prescribed notice was not received by the police; if he will indicate in each case whether (a) masked men or (b) armed men were observed by the police or of whose presence the police have photographic evidence; and if he will state in each case how many persons have been charged in connection with such a procession.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1985]: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received and from what sources requesting a ban on the Apprentice Boys 12 August demonstration in Londonderry city; whether, in deciding whether to impose a ban on demonstrations of this type, he seeks the advice of the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary regarding the practicality of re-routeing the procession; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 24 July 1985]: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations. In deciding whether to use his powers to prohibit a public procession, he considers a range of factors, including police advice.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Costs

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will identify the residual housing costs which will no longer be met in the assessment of income support under the proposals contained in paragraph 2.93 of volume 2 of the Green Paper; what are the average amounts paid out for such residual housing costs; and how many claimants are in receipt of such payments, broken down according to the normal classification claimant groups.

Mr. Newton: The residual housing costs referred to in paragraph 2.93 of volume 2 of the Green Paper are water rates, recurring charges for emptying cesspits, septic tanks and the cost of materials for a chemical toilet and the allowance for repairs and insurance. Provisional information shows that in 1983 about 3 million supplementary benefit claimants received help with their water charges and that the average payment was little over £1. There is no reliable information about the numbers or average amounts of payments made for the other residual housing costs.

Schizophrenic Patients

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what provision he is making for the care of schizophrenic patients whose long-stay mental hospitals have been closed and who are subsequently refused admission as emergency cases by other National Health Service hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 22 July.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to hold all future meetings with the tobacco industry on the voluntary code on advertising and promotion in public; if he has discussed such an arrangement with the industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The practice is for the discussions leading to the voluntary agreements with the tobacco industry to be confidential.

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the four-page advertising feature in the August edition of "Options" magazine, a copy of which has been sent to him by the hon. Member for Brent, South, which emphasises the logo and colours of a certain brand of cigarette, should have carried the Government health warning; if this constitutes a breach of the voluntary agreement; and if he will take action to prevent any recurrence of this form of sales promotion.

Mr. John Patten: The cigarette manufacturers concerned have apologised for the lapse that led to the publication of the advertising feature in question and other similar features, and have undertaken that no further advertisements of this nature will be published.

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what sanctions are available to him against cigarette manufacturers who fail to follow the code of conduct on promotion and advertising.

Mr. John Patten: The agreement on tobacco advertising and promotion is voluntary. Where breaches have been established the cigarette companies have always taken corrective action.

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will have discussions with the tobacco company concerned, in the context of the voluntary agreement on cigarette advertising, about the showing at the Live Aid charity concert at Wembley stadium on 13 July of a cigarette promotion on video tape, details of which have been supplied to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Human Growth Hormone

Mr. Conlan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in what circumstances it has been decided to withdraw all supplies of pituitary-derived human growth hormone; if there are any cases known to his Department of Creutzfeld-Jakob disease arising from the use of human growth hormone; how many patients are affected by the withdrawal of supplies; and what arrangements are being made for the treatment of these patients.

Mr. John Patten: Supplies of human growth hormone derived from pituitary extract have been withdrawn on the advice of the Advisory Committee on National Pituitary Collection because of the risk of transmission of Creutzfeld-Jakob disease. The Department is aware of three cases in other countries where such transmission is thought to have occurred, and there is one case under investigation in this country. Prior to withdrawal growth hormone treatment was being provided for approximately 800 children. Sufficient synthetic human growth hormone is available for the treatment of the very small number of children for whom growth hormone supplementation is life saving.

Supplementary Benefit

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest available figures for the number of (a) one-parent families and (b) two-parent families who have income below supplementary benefit level, at supplementary benefit level and within 110 per cent. of supplementary benefit level; and if he will give the number of children involved in each category.

Mr. Whitney: The latest information relates to 1981 and is as follows:

Income relative to supplementary benefit level	One Parent Families		Two Parent Families
	Families	Children in Families	Families	Children in Families
(i) below level	60,000	110,000	200,000	490,000

(iii) above but within 110 per cent†	‡	‡	130,000	290,000

Notes: The figures have been calculated on the same basis as those in the published tables "Low Income Families 1981" and are subject to the constraints described in the notes to those tables.

* Receiving supplementary benefit.

† Excludes those given at (i).

‡ Less than 10,000.

Appeals

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the number of social security cases lodged and awaiting a hearing by a social security appeal tribunal at December 1983, December 1984 and currently;

(2) what was the average time between the lodging of an appeal and subsequent hearing by a social security appeal tribunal in 1983, 1984 and currently.

Mr. Whitney: Information on the number of all appeals lodged and awaiting hearing is not available. The most recent figures which are available are as follows:

	Supplementary Benefit Appeal Tribunals			National Insurance Local Tribunals
	Number of appeals lodged	Number of appeals heard	Lodgement to initial hearing (average)	Number of appeals/ references lodged	Number of appeals/ references heard	Lodgement to initial hearing
12 month period ending 31 December 1983	142,779	60,567	9·4 weeks	n/a*	30,468	n/a*
Quarter ending 31 March 1984	37,721	16,871	10·5 weeks	n/a	8,150	n/a*

* A revised system of recording information about the processing of appeals is now in operation and more detailed information will be available in due course.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of social security cases awaiting a rehearing of appeal following a commissioner's decision which remitted the case for rehearing to a different social security appeal tribunal at December 1983, December 1984 and currently.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The numbers of social security cases remitted by the commissioners for rehearing by a differently constituted appeal tribunal were as follows:

		Issues
1 January 1985 to 2 July 1985	=	366

Housing Benefit

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate for the number of (a) one-parent families and (b) two-parent families receiving (i) certificated housing benefit and (ii) standard housing benefit; in each case what is the average amount of (1) rent rebate and (2) rate rebate; and what are the numbers receiving benefit as a percentage of those eligible.

Mr. Whitney: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Acute Beds (Staffing)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give figures for the staffing ratio for acute beds in National Health Service hospitals for each of the years from 1973 to the latest date available.

Mr. John Patten: It is not possible to provide information on the basis requested as we cannot identify centrally all those staff working solely or mainly in the acute hospital services. The table gives the number of available acute beds in National Health Service hospitals in England, and the total numbers of directly-employed NHS staff. While the table shows the number of acute beds has decreased since 1973, it is important to remember that the number of inpatient cases treated per bed — "throughput"—has risen by nearly 32 per cent. over the period.

NHS Staff

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total number of (a) hospital nurses, (b) midwives, (c) health visitors and (d) district nurses employed by the National Health Service in (i) Britain and (ii) Cheltenham health district in 1978 and 1984; what was the percentage increase in each case; and how this compares with the previous five-year period.

Mr. John Patten: Information at this level of detail is not yet available for 1984. The table shows the requested information for Great Britain for 1973, 1977, 1978 and 1983, and for Cheltenham health district for 1983 only:

[6] Following NHS Re-Organisation on 1 April 1974 staff previously employed by Local Authority Health Departments were transferred to area health authorities. Therefore the wholetime equivalent for 1973 and the percentage changes for 1973 to 1977 are not directly comparable with those for later years.
[7] Before the 1982 NHS Re-Organisation Cheltenham was not a separately identified health authority, but was combined with Gloucester therefore comparable figures for earlier years are not available.

Patients (Statistics)

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the total number of outpatient attendances in (a) Britain and (b) Cheltenham health district in 1978 and 1984; what was the percentage increase in each case; and how this compares with the previous five-year period;

(2) what was the total number of inpatients treated in (a) Britain and (b) Cheltenham health district in 1978 and 1984; what was the percentage increase in each case; and how this compares with the previous five year period.

Mr. John Patten: Information is not available centrally in precisely the form requested. The available information is given in the table.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total number of day patient attendances for treating mental illness and mental handicap for each year since 1978 in (a) Britain and (b) the Cheltenham health district.

Mr. John Patten: The available information for Great Britain is given in the table. Returns available centrally indicate that there were no facilities for treating mental illness and mental handicap patients which were managed by the Cheltenham and District health authority during 1982 or 1983 or by the Cheltenham health district in 1978. Between 1979 and 1981 the former Cheltenham and Gloucester health districts were merged within Gloucester area health authority.

Cheltenham Health District

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report for each year since 1974-75 for the Cheltenham health district (a) the revenue expenditure in actual and real terms compared to 1974-75, (b) the number of inpatient cases treated and (c) the number of outpatient cases treated.

Mr. John Patten: We do not have the information requested in (a) available centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact the Chairman of the Cheltenham and District health authority for details of revenue expenditure.

Locum Doctors

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much the Portsmouth and South-East Hampshire health authority has spent on locum doctors in the last three years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not hold the information requested centrally. The hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of the health authority.

Drug Abuse Centres

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of drug abuse centres in the Greater London area; and what has been the amount of his Department's money that has been spent on these centres in each of the last three years.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to "Drug Misuse: Prevalence and Service Provision" published by the Department in June. Expenditure on specialist hospital and community health services for drug misusers is not separately identified. Under the Department's general scheme of grants to voluntary organisations, grants have been made to the following voluntary bodies providing services for drug misusers in Greater London.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the net trend in numbers of National Health Service hospital beds since the Resources Allocation Working Party formula was first applied (a) in regions which have gained under the Resources Allocation Working Party formula and (b) in regions which have had resources reduced under the Resources Allocation Working Party formula.

Mr. John Patten: The available information is given in the table. Over this period the number of inpatient cases treated in England rose from 5,345,000 in 1977 to 6,019,000 in 1983.

[1] The four Thames regions (together with hospitals managed by Boards of Governors Special Health Authorities) have been treated as a single unit for the purposes of this reply. Boundary changes in 1982 would mean that trends by separate authorities would be misleading.

[2] Oxford regional health authority's position has changed relative to its target fair share of resources during the period as follows: 1977-78 to 1979-80 above target, 1980-81 to 1982-83 below target, 1983-84 on target.

Non-contributory Invalidity Pension

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many married and cohabiting women have made claims for housewives' non-contributory invalidity pension since 25 November 1984; how many of these claims have been accepted on grounds of good cause for late claim; and how many of the claims that have been accepted have been successful;

(2) how many claims for housewives' non-contributory invalidity pension received after 25 November 1984 have been refused, and, of these, how many (a) have made successful claims for severe disablement allowance (b) are in the age group excluded from severe disablement allowance until November 1985 and (c) have been assessed at less than 80 per cent. disabled.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. However, between 25 November 1984 and 5 July 1985 there were some 4,000 claims for housewives' non-contributory invalidity pension, 4,200 awards and 2,500 disallowances. Details are not available for the success or failure of claims for severe disablement allowance which follow an unsuccessful claim for HNCIP, but as at 2 July some 1,200 married or cohabiting women had been awarded SDA, and a further 900 had been assessed as less than 80 per cent. disabled.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether special arrangements have been made to deal with claims for invalid care allowance by married and cohabiting women since invalid care allowance was awarded to Mrs. Drake on 1 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The case of Mrs. Jaqueline Drake was referred to the Social Security commissioner for decision. The commissioner has put to the European Court the question whether the EC directive on equal treatment in social security matters applies to invalid care allowance. Until the court gives its judgment and the Social Security Commissioner makes his decision in Mrs. Drake's case, any other claims from married or cohabiting women for invalid care allowance are being stored to be adjudicated once the outcome of Mrs. Drake's case is known. A letter explaining the position is sent acknowledging all such claims.

"S" Manual

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department's "S" manual has been revised or updated since the 1983 edition; and if he will make it his practice to place copies of new editions in the Library.

Mr. Whitney: The 1983 edition of the "S" manual has been updated by means of circulars and replacement pages. All these are placed in the Library as soon as they are publicly available.

Pensions

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that nurses, midwives and health visitors retiring during the next 18 months will not suffer a reduced pension consequent upon the phasing of the pay award due on 1 April.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No, for the reasons set out in my reply to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Meadowcroft), on 28 June at column 531.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to ensure that cigarette manufacturers do not carry out promotional activities contrary to the terms of the voluntary agreement on cigarette advertising.

Mr. John Patten: The agreement is monitored by the Department and if my hon. Friend has a particular breach in mind perhaps he would write to me with details.

North-West Thames RHA

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the health authorities under the responsibility of the North-West Thames regional health authority and name the chairmen, vice-chairmen and secretaries of each of the authorities and the addresses to which official correspondence should be sent.

Mr. John Patten: We do not appoint the vice-chairmen of district health authorities. They are elected by the chairmen and members of the authority from within their own number. This information is therefore not held centrally. The right hon. Member may wish to obtain it from the relevant district health authority chairman. District health authorities do not have such a post as secretary. The other information requested is as follows:

Mr. John Patten: No.

Mr. Harrison asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to receive recommendations from the new Riverside health authority about the future of Westminster hospital.

Mr. John Patten: I explained in my reply to the right hon. Member on 22 July that the planning of services at the Westminster hospital is in the first instance the responsibility of the Riverside health authority.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Onslow asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the case for restoring the drug Mucodyne to the National Health Service prescription list; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 24 July.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received a number of letters and other representations about these drugs. The Advisory Committee on NHS Drugs will be free to reconsider at any time the need for these drugs, either on its own initiative or in response to representations from doctors or the pharmaceutical industry. Formal representations have already been received in respect of asilone and dimotapp.

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of people who satisfy the test of incapacity for work for the purposes of severe disablement allowance, but do not satisfy the test of 80 per cent. disability; and what is the cost of benefits currently in payment to such people.

Mr. Newton: As at 2 July, 1,165 people who satisfied the incapacity for work test had been assessed as less than 80 per cent. disabled for the purposes of severe disablement allowance. Information about the cost of benefits currently in payment to these people is not available.

Disability Aids

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what sources of information on the various aids for the disabled are available from his Department to private individuals seeking to purchase equipment for their own use, doctors and social workers seeking to provide publicly-funded equipment for their clients' or patients' use, and National Health Service staff wishing to acquire such aids in bulk for use within their area.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 1 July, at column 65, to his general question about sources of information on aids, when I explained that the Department publishes reports on the assessment and evaluation of ranges of equipment which are aimed at relevant professionals, and provides additional advice and information to supplies officers within the National Health Service. I also mentioned the booklet "Aids for the Disabled" (HB2) and exhibitions of aids; the booklet is freely available on request and the Department regularly participates in NAIDEX and is occasionally represented at other exhibitions.

Artificial limb and appliance centres are sources of information on wheelchairs. The Department produces a descriptive catalogue of the wheelchairs in its range and is currently working with therapists to update that catalogue and to produce more information and training materials aimed at therapists and other professionals. The catalogue is distributed to all general practitioners and relevant hospital staff and is available on request to others, though it is not supplied to members of the public. A booklet giving details of the environmental control and typewriter equipment provided by the Department and how it can be ordered has been distributed to all relevant staff in health authorities and local authority social services departments and to other bodies with a particular interest.

Apart from its own activities, the Department has for many years taken every opportunity to encourage dissemination of information by others. In particular, substantial financial support is given to the Disabled Living Foundation, which provides a national service for disabled people, their carers and the professionals who work with them. The foundation's activities include an information service which collects, stores and distributes up-to-date information on the aids available in the United Kingdom and an aids centre which displays aids and arranges individual assessments. The Department also subsidises "Equipment for the Disabled", a series of illustrated books, published by Oxford health authority, which contain information on aids which have been assessed in use with disabled people or subjected to research evaluation.

Students (Benefits)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what considerations were given to (a) the availability of temporary summer employment, (b) the cost of living for students and (c) the proportion of student income currently represented by housing and social security benefits, when drawing up the proposals to exclude students from eligibility for these benefits in the Green Paper on the reform of social security; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Green Paper "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9517) states in broad terms the Government's policy on student access to the benefit system. How best to put that policy into practice will be for further consideration in the light of all the relevant factors.

Board and Lodging

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the arrangements for reviewing the financial limits of elderly residents in board and lodging accommodation.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my announcement yesterday in the House, at column 1355.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will extend the board and lodging regulations covering residential care homes to include (a) those which prior to 29 April met their fees from their own resources but whose capital has subsequently fallen below the £3,000 limit and (b) those which had claimed some benefit prior to 29 April but had it temporarily stopped because their capital exceeded the £3,000 limit.

Mr. Newton: I assume the hon. Member has in mind the provisions within the board and lodging regulations concerning transitional protection. We have no plans at present to extend these provisions to cover the groups the hon. Member mentions. It is the normal practice where changes in the benefit system are necessary to confine the protection arrangements to existing claimants.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will amend the board and lodging regulations covering residential homes for the elderly to cover all existing residents irrespective of income.

Mr. Newton: No. The board and lodging regulations deal solely with payments of supplementary benefit. This is a means-tested benefit and all other income is therefore generally counted as a resource.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will ensure that priority treatment is given to appeals against rejection of applications for exemption under the new board and lodgings regulations.

Mr. Whitney: The Department is responsible for the preparation of supplementary benefit appeal documentation and transmission to the clerk of a social security appeal tribunal. Responsibility for the hearing itself rests with the president of social security appeal tribunals. The Department gives a high priority to the handling of appeals, which should normally be cleared within 15 days from receipt. Arrangements are in hand to ensure that, within the generality of appeals, those which relate to the new board and lodging regulations are dealt with as quickly as possible.

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has conducted a survey to establish whether claimants affected by the expiry of time limits on payment as boarders have been able to make alternative arrangements to receive supplementary benefit as householders or non-householders or to obtain payment as boarders in other areas.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the analyses of board and lodging following the 29 April changes have not yet been completed. However, initial feedback suggests that as a result of the new rules the numbers receiving board and lodging payments have declined significantly, and that most of the claimants affected are now receiving benefit at the householder or non-householder rate.

Residential Homes

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many elderly residents there were in residential care homes between (a) 1 January and 28 April and (b) 29 April to the latest available date; and what information he has to how many have their fees paid by his Department, and how many are self-supporting.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of (a) statutory, (b) private and (c) voluntary residential care homes for the elderly and (d) the number of places in such homes in 1979 and each subsequent year in each social services authority.

Mr. John Patten: Information on the numbers of statutory, voluntary and private homes for the elderly and disabled, and the number of places in such homes, as at 31 March 1984, the latest date for which information is available, is given in the table. Equivalent figures for each of the years 1979 to 1983 were given in my replies to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 2 March 1984, at columns 386-90, to the hon. Member herself on 11 June 1984, at columns 378-82, and to my hon. Friend the Member for York (Mr. Gregory) on 15 June 1984 at columns 586-94.

Social Security Review

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, under proposals in his social security Green Paper, a double family premium will be paid to all families having a visually handicapped child whether or not the child is in receipt of mobility or attendance allowance.

Mr. Newton: Yes.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the double family premium proposed in his social security Green Paper will be increased for families with more than one child who is visually handicapped or otherwise disabled.

Mr. Newton: The proposal is that it would not.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements, under the pension plans proposed in his social security Green Paper, will be made to make provision, in addition to basic state retirement pension, for people with erratic work records or low incomes because of sickness or disability throughout their working lives.

Mr. Newton: Under the new arrangements proposed in the Green Paper "Reform of Social Security", employers and employees will be required to contribute at least a minimum amount to an occupational or personal pension scheme. The minimum requirements proposed for the new arrangements are intended to ensure that everybody is able to build up a reasonable additional pension to supplement his basic national insurance pension. The value of that additional private pension will depend on a variety of factors, including how the individual's earnings change during his working life. People will be able to decide for themselves whether they wish to increase their contributions above the minimum level. The Green Paper makes it clear that the Government will be giving further consideration to the implications of the new arrangements for invalidity benefit.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if, where both partners of a couple are (a) blind, (b) partially sighted or (c) otherwise disabled, a double disablement premium will be paid under the proposals in the Government's social security Green Paper;

(2) if the disablement premium proposed in his social security Green Paper will be paid to non-disabled claimants in respect of a partner who is (a) blind or (b) partially sighted.

Mr. Newton: The disablement premium would be payable where the partner of a claimant is blind. In cases where both partners satisfy the qualifying conditions for the disablement premium, one premium only would be payable. As regards the position of partially-sighted people, I refer the hon. Member to my other reply to him today.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if the higher pensioner premium proposed in his social security Green Paper will be paid to all visually handicapped claimants aged 60 years or over;

(2) if the higher pensioner premium proposed in his social security Green Paper will be paid to non-disabled claimants in respect of a visually handicapped partner aged 60 years and over;

(3) if a double rate of higher pensioner premium will be paid, under the proposals in his social security Green Paper, where both partners in a couple are visually handicapped or otherwise disabled.

Mr. Newton: A higher pensioner premium would be payable in respect of blindness in the same way as receipt of one of the qualifying benefits. Thus a blind person, whether claimant or partner, aged 60 years and over would be eligible for it. One higher pensioner premium only would be paid in respect of any couple.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, under the proposals in his social security Green Paper, the disablement premium will be paid to partially sighted claimants who are unemployed.

Mr. Newton: We shall consider this issue as we work up the details of the income support scheme and in the light of comments received.

Nursing Staff (Bexley)

Mr. Barnett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will call for a report from the South East Thames health authority about the restriction of admissions to the psychiatric division of Bexley hospital arising from a shortage of nursing staff.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. This is a matter for Bexley health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority.

Care in the Community

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if the Government remain satisfied that care in the community for those needing special care and attention remains cost effective; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the latest estimate of the cost of caring for those with physical or behavioural difficulties and those who suffer mental handicap in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The cost of providing community care depends on the particular needs of individuals and the range of services required to meet those needs. For people with a low level of dependency community care may well cost less than institutional care: for those of higher dependency, it may well cost more. The comparative cost will also depend upon local circumstances such as the services already available and the opportunities for development.

I do not think that in the present state of knowledge I could offer any useful generalisations about the cost of community care. The programme of pilot projects which we are centrally funding under the care in the community initiative should in due course provide useful insights into the cost of providing community care for people with a wide range of needs moving out of hospital into the community in a variety of situations.

We are not promoting community care as a cost-neutral policy. We expect health and local authorities to give priority to services, both hospital and community, for vulnerable people, such as mentally handicapped, mentally ill, elderly and disabled people. There has been a very significant increase on the level of spending on all services for these patients over the last six years.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the progress of the community care programme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Some progress has been made in recent years in the development of community care. For example, over the last decade or so places for mentally handicapped people in local authority homes and hostels have more than doubled to reach over 14,000, and adult training centre places have increased by almost one third to 47,000. Places funded by local authorities in residential accomodation for mentally ill people have increased from about 3,000 to over 5,000. Day hospital places for mentally ill people more than doubled to over 15,000 and day centre places increased from about 5,000 to over 8,000. The number of psychiatric nurses working in the community has tripled to over 2,000 in the period. A study in 1981 showed that over 1,000 supported housing schemes for mentally ill and mentally handicapped people had been developed in the preceding 10 to 15 years, providing over 5,000 places. Many more people will have moved through these schemes into ordinary accommodation over the period.

Spending by local social services authorities has increased by over 20 per cent. in real terms since 1978-79. We have supported the development of community care by the injection of over £600 million of National Health Service funds through the joint finance arrangements up to and including this year's allocation.

Progress in developing community care will depend to a large extent on the further development of joint planning between health authorities, local authorities and voluntary organisations. We will continue to encourage health authorities to promote the care in the community initiative and to develop community care working with local authorities and voluntary bodies. The new social fund, proposed as part of the Government's reform of social security, will, among other things, help to promote community care.

War Pensions

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation to disallow war pensions when assessing rate allowances and housing benefit.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so, but current legislation already provides for the first £4 of a war disablement pension or war widow's pension to be ignored when calculating entitlement to housing benefit (including rate rebates).

Skoal Bandits

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will introduce legislation to prohibit the sale of Skoal Bandits in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Snuff Dipping

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice the Chief Medical Officer has issued to medical practitioners in England and Wales on the dangers of snuff dipping; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Chief Medical Officer informed doctors on 19 April of advice from the Department's committee on carcinogenicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment that snuff-dipping increased the likelihood of oral cancer. Doctors were told that although snuff-dipping was less dangerous than cigarette smoking and its use as an alternative to cigarettes would lead to lower risks of cancer and other conditions, it could not be recommended as an aid to smokers to give up the habit. For non-smokers snuff-dipping would undoubtedly increase the risk of cancer.

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is available to him as to the connection between the incidence of mortality of mouth cancer and the practice of snuff dipping by women; from what sources this is drawn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Private Patients (Charges)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent capital costs are included in the fees charged to private patients.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Charges are enhanced by 18·9 per cent. to reflect capital costs.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether private patients are charged for emergency pathology requests.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Private non-resident patients at health service hospitals are those who give an undertaking (or for whom one is given) to pay the charges determined by the Secretary of State for services made available at authorised hospitals. Requests for emergency pathology investigations are chargeable under these arrangements. Private resident patients pay an all-inclusive daily charge and are not liable to pay additional charges to the hospital for diagnostic procedures.

National Health Service

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 11 July, Official Report, columns 495-97, how the better quality of service to patients is being measured; and by whom.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We use a range of indicators covering such matters as the level of staff and other resources directly involved with patient care, changes in the pattern and distribution of services, developments in service levels and advances in new forms of diagnosis and treatment. We are well advanced with the development of better information and indicators on all these subjects. Health service managers at all levels monitor these improvements through regular performance reviews.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 11 July, Official Report, columns 495-97, if he will make a statement on the implications for achieving value for money and clearer accountability in the National Health Service of the decision, from 1 April, to make independent family practitioner committees directly accountable to the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The change in family practitioner committee status on 1 April established accountability from FPCs to the Secretary of State. Circular HC(FP)(85)10 which we issued in April, introduced management arrangements to secure that accountability including a process of annual FPC reviews and scrutinies which is now under way. We require FPCs to pursue value for money across the whole range of their responsibilities and, in addition to the management circular, we gave further guidance in a letter dated 29 March 1985 and sent it to all FPC chairmen. Copies of both are in the Library.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 11 July, Official Report, columns 495-97, if he will provide further details of the opinion poll on attitudes to the National Health Service; what was the size of the sample; and what were the other findings.

Mr. John Patten: The opinion poll, conducted by Marplan, was commissioned by the National Association of Health Authorities and the Health and Social Services Journal, from which the hon. Member could obtain further information.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 11 July, Official Report, columns 495-97, how many of the inpatients treated had been in five-day wards and have had to return for further treatment.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 11 July, Official Report, columns 495-97, what criteria were used to determine that the 1984 treatment figures should be compared with 1978 and waiting list figures with 1979.

Mr. John Patten: These were the figures which best reflected activity in the National Health Service at the end of the last Labour Government's tenure of office.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the effect on demand on the National Health Service resulting from the increased numbers of unemployed and, in particular, the increase in long-term unemployed.

Mr. John Patten: Little of the research carried out so far to quantify the possible effects of unemployment on health has been conclusive. Our priority is to continue to pursue policies to bring down unemployment and to continue to meet the health needs of the population, whatever their cause.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average capital expenditure on the National Health Service per year from 1974 to 1979; and how this compares with the average capital expenditure on the National Health Service per year from 1979 onwards.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Average annual National Health Service capital spending in England was £325 million between 1974-75 and 1978-79 and £641 million between 1979-80 and 1984-85.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether income from the sale of National Health Service property is taken into account when allocating funds to the National Health Service health regions and health districts, respectively.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not take this income into account when we allocate funds to regional health authorities. The allocation of funds to district health authorities is a matter for RHAs to determine in the light of local needs and circumstances. As a general rule, we expect districts to be allowed to keep receipts from the sales of land or property without prejudice to their future allocations. But in the event, for example, of the sale of a large mental illness or mental handicap hospital serving a number of districts, we would expect the region to bear the income from the sale in mind in considering how to deploy resources generally to promote services in the districts concerned.

Hospital Contractors (VAT)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated loss of revenue from the freeing of hospital contractors from value added tax.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No special VAT arrangements apply to hospital contractors. Health authorities, in common with Government Departments, are able to reclaim VAT paid on certain contracted-out services. There was no loss to the Exchequer on existing contracts when the arrangement was introduced. Health authorities' cash allocations were adjusted accordingly. The effect in relation to new contracts is not determinable.

Doctors

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to how many doctors providing treatment in the private sector do not also work in the National Health Service; and how many were not trained in the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not have this information.

Private Patients

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the net income to the National Health Service from services provided to private patients.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 14 December 1984 at columns 667-68.

Private Hospitals

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he has taken to satisfy himself of the adequacy of the arrangements to prevent fraud in the course of co-operation between private hospitals and the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The form of any contractual agreement and the terms of the financial arrangements are for negotiation between a health authority and the private body, but are subject to audit in the usual way.

Opticians (Prices)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the abolition of the sole right of qualified opticians to dispense glasses has led to a fall in prices to below the level previously charged for National Health Service glasses.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes, we are satisfied that, in addition to a range of attractive frames at prices which many would not have thought possible 18 months ago, the current prices of many prescription glasses compare favourably with prices of National Health Service glasses prior to April of this year.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the average hospital waiting list in September from 1974 to 1978; and how this compares with the average September waiting list from 1979 to 1984;

(2) what was the fall in inpatient waiting lists between April 1979 and April 1981;

(3) what was the fall in inpatient waiting lists between April 1982 and April 1984.

Mr. John Patten: The district inpatient list return (SBH203) was introduced in September 1975 and records the position on 31 March and 30 September each year. The available information since 30 September 1975 is given in table 4 of the Department's statistical note 1/85 "In-Patient Waiting List on 30 September 1984, NHS Hospitals, England", a copy of which is in the Library. Information for September 1974 is not available.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the criteria used for compiling hospital waiting lists; and how those criteria have changed since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: The coverage of the district inpatient waiting list returns (SBH203) is given on the first page of the latest bound volume of district returns for 30 September 1984, a copy of which is in the Library. There has been no change in coverage since the introduction of this return in September 1975, but the guidance notes for completion were clarified on two occasions in September 1979 and March 1980. Details of these clarification notes were given in health notice HN(79)103 and statistical memorandum SM(80)2/1, copies of which are available in the Library.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish for each year since 1978 and at the latest available date the number of National Health Service hospital wards closed (a) permanently and (b) temporarily and the average number of National Health Service hospital beds which could not be used because of staff or other shortages.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not have information in the form requested. Numbers of beds in hospitals or parts of hospitals approved for permanent closure are as follows. These are all beds no longer sensibly required for any patient services. We do not collect information on temporary closures or on beds which cannot be used.

Number of beds approved for closure

1979	1,987
1980	2,517

1983	4,336
1984	4,822

Family Expenditure

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the analysis of the Family Expenditure Survey, detailing data on the numbers of poor and low income households.

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 3 July to my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) at column 177.

British Pensioners (South Africa)

Mr. Andrew Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost of providing retirement pensions at the current United Kingdom level for (a) all British pensioners living in the Republic of South Africa and (b) all British pensioners aged 75 and over living in the Republic of South Africa.

Mr. Whitney: The cost of paying retirement pensions to British pensioners living in South Africa at current United Kingdom levels, including those of 75 years and over, is estimated at about £8·5 million. Separate figures for pensioners aged 75 and over are not available.

Population Statistics

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people there were aged (a) between 65 to 75 years and (b) over 75 years in (i) Dorset (ii) Devon (iii) Cornwall and (iv) Somerset in each year since, and including, 1979.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is as follows:

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list (a) the number of people aged between 65 years and 75 years and (b) the number of people of 75 years and over in 1979 and each subsequent year in each social services authority.

Mr. John Patten: The following information is available for regional health authority areas in England and Wales. Population estimates are not available for social service authority areas.

Arm Amputees (Chiropody)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to reach a decision on whether or not to provide private chiropody for war pensioner arm amputees when their need for treatment cannot be met through the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: As soon as possible.

Special Health Authorities (Appointments)

Mr. Walden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will be appointing new chaimen and members to the special health authorities for London postgraduate teaching hospitals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The term of office of six chairmen of the special health authorities for London postgraduate teaching hospitals and some 80 members ends on 31 March 1986. We are currently seeking nominations for these posts and if hon. Members wish to recommend any individuals I invite them to write to me by 30 September 1985. Reappointments and changes will be announced in due course.

Newcastle Pensions Office (Dispute)

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what effects are still being felt as a result of industrial action at the Newcastle pensions office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: There are still substantial arrears of work leading to delays of up to four weeks in dealing with correspondence. However, substantial progress in clearing the backlog is being made and, in general, payments of pension are being issued on time and the emergency payment arrangements have now ceased.

Drug Addicts

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make extra resources available to regional health authorities' for the development and expansion of rehabilitation and treatement centres for drug addicts.

Mr. John Patten: We have already made available £11½ million centrally to pump-prime local projects. The possible need for further money will be considered in the light of health authorities' plans for service development and other competing priorities.

Coronary Bypass Operations

Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the figures showing coronary bypass operations per 100,000 of the population, in the west midlands, the national average, and the national target figure for this form of surgery for the latest available date.

Mr. John Patten: During 1984 West Midlands regional health authority carried out coronary artery bypass graft operations at an approximate rate of 10 per 100,000 population. It plans to double the number of operations by the end of the decade. The national average figure for 1983, the latest available date, was 16·86 operations per 100,000 population. We do not set a national target figure, but health authorities have been asked to develop coronary artery surgery as a priority.

Students (Accommodation)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is available to his Department concerning the number and proportion of students who live in accommodation covered by approved tenancy agreements which include rental for part of the vacations; and what effect the proposals contained in the Green Paper, "Reform of Social Security" will have on these students and this sector of the housing market.

Mr. Newton: The number of students living in accommodation covered by tenancy agreements is not known. The Green Paper states the Government's general aim that students should have one channel of support through the education system rather than the income support or housing benefit schemes. What effect, if any, that policy would have for students with tenancies and the relevant sector of the housing market cannot be evaluated until detailed proposals have been drawn up.

Nurses

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why nurses are not considered for distinction awards in the same way as are doctors and surgeons.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

National Insurance

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has had in his consultations with the computer industry, including the suppliers of pay-roll packages, on his Departments' requirements for year-end information from employers on national insurance contributions under the new mutliple regime; and when he expects to make his response.

Mr. Whitney: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Supplementary Benefit

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what further action he proposes to take to trace former supplementary benefit claimants from whom benefit was wrongfully withheld on grounds of voluntary unemployment; and whether he will make it his policy that no action will be taken to destroy the relevant files before the House has had an opportunity to debate the matter.

Mr. Newton: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Basildon Hospital

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of births at Basildon hospital in each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Hospital Radio

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will issue guidelines to health authorities regarding the availability of hospital radio.

Mr. John Patten: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Welfield Hospital, Hatfield

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the proposed expansion of the Welfield hospital in Hatfield is expected to commence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about arrangements for the marketing of products and processes at the Public Health Laboratory Service Board's centre for applied microbiology and research.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 4 April 1985, c. 772]: I am pleased to announce that the Public Health Laboratory Service Board has entered into a further agreement with Porton International Limited whereby Porton International Limited will construct and operate a new fermentation production plant, funded wholly by it, at the centre for applied microbiology and research (CAMR). Up to one third of the new plant will be made available for public health laboratory service research and development activities at CAMR.

NHS (Expenditure)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the total expenditure on National Health Service ancillary services for the latest available year including practitioner service staff;

(2) what was the total expenditure on National Health Service professional and technical services for the latest available year;

(3) what was the total expenditure on National Health Service administrative and clerical services for the latest available year;

(4) what was the total expenditure on National Health Service works and maintenance services for the latest available year.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 9 July 1985, c. 374]: We do not collect figures in this precise form. The table gives figures derived from the annual accounts of health authorities in England for 1983-84, which are summarised in House of Commons paper No. 331 of 1984-85. Booklets giving a more detailed summary of the accounts for recent years are also available in the Library.

Current expenditure by Health Authorities, 1983-84

	£ million
Catering, domestic/cleaning, portering, laundry and linen services and transport	1,146·9
Medical and paramedical supporting services	734·4
Administrative and clerical support services at local level (including ambulance service administration)	522·0
Headquarters administration	361·2
Building, engineering and grounds maintenance	436·1

Notes

1. The figures exclude the expenses of the Dental Estimates Board, Prescription Pricing Authority and other special health authorities providing NHS central services.
2. The costs of ancillary staff employed in the family practitioner services are not separately identifiable centrally.
3. The figure for catering, domestic etc services includes expenditure on those services which appear in the published summary as part of "Headquarters administration". This expenditure is excluded from the total for headquarters administration given in the table.

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give, in round figures, the annual cost of the National Health Service for each of the last five years, specifying for each year the amount spent on administrative, clinical and auxiliary services, respectively, and the percentage figures each represents of the whole;

(2) if he will give, in round figures, the annual cost of the National Health Service for each of the past five years, specifying the numbers employed and the total wage bill in respect of each year, giving the wage bill as a percentage of the total annual cost;

(3) if he will give, in round figures, the total annual cost of the National Health Service for each of the past five years, broken down into regions and districts, respectively; and what is the percentage figure each represents of the whole.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 16 July 1985, c. 132]: For the analysis of expenditure by function, and for the breakdown between pay and non-pay items, I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. and learned Friend's replies to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on 18 January 1984, at columns 251-55 and 21 December 1984 at columns 412-14. These are the latest figures available. The numbers of staff employed in the hospital and community health services (in whole time equivalents) on 30 September of each year were:

	Numbers
1980	788,100

	Numbers
1981	818,700
1982	825,000
1983	823,800

The table shows the breakdown of hospital and community health services current expenditure between regions. An analysis by districts (areas for 1980-81 and 1981-82) is included in summaries of English health authorities' accounts which our Department has prepared as a series of booklets. Copies of these are available in the Library.

Tooth Decay

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what he estimates to be the cost of treating tooth decay in school age children in each of the last five years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 16 July 1985, c. 137]: The cost of providing fillings, crowns and inlays or pinlays in school age children in England under the general dental service for each of the last five years was as follows:

	£ million
1980	19·9
1981	21·7
1982	21·8
1983	22·4
1984	21·8

The cost of similar treatment provided under the community and hospital dental services cannot be separately identified.

Repatriation Scheme

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of individuals aided by his Department's repatriation scheme in 1982, 1983 and 1984 and the expenditure incurred in each of those years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to the reply, 19 July 1985, c. 307]: The following information is readily available about single payments for voluntary repatriation expenses made under the Supplementary Benefits Act 1976. The table shows the number of persons assisted in 1982, January 1983 to November 1983 inclusive and December 1983 to May 1985 inclusive.

	Number of cases	Amount £
1982	49	16,534

December 1983 to May 1985	40

Nurses

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list nursing manpower levels in National Health Service hospitals in each year since 1979; and which district or regional health authorities have been affected most resulting from decreases in such manpower.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 18 July 1985, c. 234]: Figures for regional health authorities are shown in the table. We could not extract the information for district health authorities without disproportionate cost. We do not yet have figures for 1984 at this level of detail. Apart from small decreases in four regions in 1982, the figures show nursing manpower levels in hospitals have continued to increase since 1979.

‡ In 1980 the working week for nursing and midwifery staff was reduced from 40 to 37½ hours and part of the increase of WTE's between 1979 and 1981 will be accounted for by additional staff recruited as a direct result of this change.
‖ Due to rounding the sum of the component figures may not agree with the totals.

Resettlement Units

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of citizens who have been accommodated in resettlement units administered by his Department since 1979.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 22 July 1985]: I regret that the information requested is not available, but our statistics show that the units are used by approximately 1,600 people each night.

Housing Benefit

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims have been submitted by retirement pensioners to his Department for housing benefit in each year since 1979.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 23 July 1985]: The information is not available in the precise form requested. It is estimated that the average number of pensioner households receiving housing benefit, or help with housing costs through the former schemes, is as follows:

Number of pensioner households receiving help with housing costs
Great Britain

1982	1,690	860	200	2,490
1983	—	1,970	520	3,910

Notes:
1. Housing benefit was introduced for some in November 1982 and for all from April 1983. Before this, help with rent and rates was provided through the supplementary benefit scheme or the former rent rebate and allowance and rate rebate schemes.
2. The figures for 1982 exclude the effect of the partial start of housing benefit.
3. Claims for housing benefit are made to local authorities.

Beds and Nurses

Mr. Campbell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospital beds and qualified nurses there are per head of population according to each health authority; and how this compares with each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 11 July, c. 582]: The available figures are shown in the tables. It should be noted that the number of inpatient cases treated in England rose from 5,132,000 in 1973 to 6,019,000 in 1983 and the number of cases treated per available bed rose from 12·7 to 17·5 over this period.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 83

SESSION 1984–85

15th July—26th July 1985

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speakers rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
